that's how the allocations work. So IARU reps from all the Region 2 countries
decide how the Region 2 HF bandplan works.

Does each member country get one vote? If so, that puts the USA, with its 661,000+ amateurs, at the same voting level as a country with a few dozen amateurs. A coalition of small countries with a handful of amateurs could dictate the bandplan for whole region.

If not, the USA's enormous amateur population makes us the de-facto 800 pound gorilla in the region.

In either case, the IARU member society for the USA is...the ARRL.
Do you think everyone will be glad the ARRL is the USA's representative for determining bandplans?

As far as cross-posting http://niggermania.com I would like to have Lloyd

Sounds like the basis of a plan to me. Probably ought to flesh it out with some inter-region liaison mechanism, since RF has a habit of crossing the arbitrary lines that we humans draw on maps.

> Does each member country get one vote?

No. IARU doesn't operate on a "one country, one vote" basis (except to elect the regional officers).

They accomplish their "work" in the framework of a purpose-appointed set of working committees, similar to the various working committee's that other international standards bodies use. These committees tend to be smallish, on the order of a dozen or less individuals and as such do not directly mirror the demographic makeup of the parent organization. This serves to isolate the committee from the "politics" and focused on the "best working solution", not the "best political solution". The committee product is set of recommendations to be adopted (or modified or rejected) by the parent organization (in this case the IARU regional officers). Rejection or modification is rare, as the oppointing body needs to justify over-riding their own appointed body of experts.

Actually, I really like this idea of a single-class license. I might even get one if it should ever be implemented, with or without code.

One license class is all that's needed. Perhaps after some elapsed time, people will quit saying that they are Extra's or Advanced, or or or..., and focus on being a good ham.

It would be better if the IARU declared a plan rather than go with the

Hello an_old_friend:

I knew from reading your posts that we thought the same. Are you into phone? Post your phone number and I pick up the tab for the call. We can talk about how much smarter we are than stupid CB'ers. Then maybe we could jack off together on the phone and giggle about ham radio! I just knew we were the same!

37 years ago. I lost privileges. You and Len did not.

And FCC was convinced that wasn't a good thing. FCC is still convinced of the need for at least 3 license classes.

You might want to read the current NPRM. Pay particular attention to footnote 142...

> Then the FCC > implemented the Incentive Licensing System which you loved, took away

> all priveleges for the General exam is lowering requirements.

And it would be. The standards were reduced in the Great Giveaway of
You want a repeat of that.

Some years back, QCWA proposed to FCC that all hams who had held a General, Conditional or Advanced before the changes took place in 1968 should get an automatic upgrade to Extra because they lost privileges then.
FCC said no way.

If you're willing to reduce the standards, the testing could be reduced. It's clear that's no problem for you.

> The General License used to convey ALL AMATEUR PRIVELEGES.

That ended 37 years ago. Why do you live in the past?

Would you like to go back to the General test of 1968? Testing at FCC offices only unless you lived more then 175 miles from an exam point, no CSCEs, no published question pools, 30 day wait to retest. Oh yes, and 13 wpm code, sending and receiving.

Who said I "loved" it?

> You're the one who > loves unnecessary licensing requirements.

none of the license requirements I support are "unnecessary".

You're the one who supports lowering the standards
again and again.

So let's see what you're proposing:

- Full amateur privileges for the testing of a General license, without any code test.

- All existing Generals, Advanceds, and Extras get full privileges. Some Technicians and Technician Pluses who passed the Tech written when it was same as General get full privileges too.

Two questions:

What happens to existing Novices and Technicians who haven't passed the General written?

FCC has repeatedly refused free (no-test) upgrades.
FCC has said that the optimum system for the future is a 3 level system, but that they'll keep the closed-out classes until they disappear by attrition.
How will you convince them to do otherwise?

But in the "real world", that would boil down to a bunch of appointed experts
going into the proverbial smoky back room and coming up with a bandplan that would have the force of law in the USA.

Other member countries might or might not make the bandplan into law.

End result is the USA's subband regulation would be determined by a committee made up of folks who are mostly not citizens of the USA, and even less beholden to American hams than the FCC or ARRL.

ARRL is criticized for making proposals on behalf of all US hams. Imagine the reaction to IARU making the rules for all US hams...

Why would any sane or reasonable person want to learn the constitution of a nation that invades other countries on dishonest pretexts, establishes concentration camps and tortures prisoners of war?
A country where presidential elections are rigged, where oil companies control domestic and foreign policy. A country that tries to overthrow democratically elected leaders in other countries for it's own profit.
A country where a racist administration dithers while black people die in floods caused by deliberate diversion of budgets.

You lot get the body bags.

Here are some simple questions for you:

How much profit per body bag are American oil companies making from Iraq?

What is the level of profit at which it is no longer worthwhile to occupy Iraq?

Will U.S. taxpayers and parents go on financing the carnage long enough for the oil companies to get all the gravy?

In another war of aggression? Hmmmmphhhhhft! You're living up to the name under which you post.

Britain was stopping and seizing American ships and kidnapping their crews.

Perhaps you've heard of the Battle of New Orleans. Thousands of redcoats were running for their lives, tossing down their weapons as they ran.

Our capital was burred?

Most wars are over when they end.

At the end of the war, were British forces on U.S. land? Did British ships attempt to seize American ships and their crews?

That's Brit-think. We Americans trace our ancestry to many different lands, yet we're all Americans. I had great-grandparents who were Irish English. I've had neighbors who were descended from Poles, Russians, Spaniards, Italians, Serbs, Ukrainians and Czechs. Who are you to refer

You had a bunch of loonies on both sides, fighting each other over whose brand of Christianity was right and proper and over who could belong to the exclusive club where all political power resides. You have Africans, long-accustomed to being lectured about the evils of tribalism, laughing at you.

We're not equals, Pointy. I have many more freedoms than you and am not under the yoke of a socialist state, at least not yet. We don't celebrate battles. We celebrate our independence and freedom. One battle which we commemorate, Pearl Harbor Day (not a holiday), was a defeat for the United States. Nobody here dresses up, wears banners, carries placards and marches into the neighborhood of the defeated and rubs their noses in it. We don't have a perfect system but it is the most free, egalitarian, bountiful country on the planet.

America left Vietnam under fire. They have not yet returned. What

Let me use your American logic - at the end of the war which America ran away from after being soundly trounced by little dudes in pointy hats so either.

Please, go and read real American history, you know, the sort without stars and stripes around the pages and discover how many wars of aggression America has waged.

I'm sorry, America was supplying an enemy combatant for profit. (Does anything ever change?) But I suppose you think we should have let that continue?

Yes I have. Perhaps you've heard of the Battle of Washington? No? Me neither. Why is that? Wasn't so much a battle as a humiliation was it? I suppose the troops there who were not militarily defeated were involved in a giant pincer movement to the south in and around the New Orleans area which the fast moving President Munro was in a hurry to personally supervise?

At the end of the war in which Great Britain was not militarily defeated and which was ended by treaty Great Britain retained a presence in North and South America unlike you lot in Vietnam.

Yes. But it would have taken longer, The biggest contribution American Old enough to know that rationing here did not end until the 50's when we'd cleared our debt caused by saving Americas and the worlds ass when we fought alone.

Hello? I don't remember America selling us any Spitfires during the Battle of Britain, do you? Now, given that by the time you lot decided it was time to come on board and really make some money we'd already won the Battle of Britain, turned the tide in Africa and Russia was turning back the Nazi hordes, Britain with the Commonwealth and Russia would have won the war without America. It might have taken longer but it would have been won. And lets get something else straight, Russia did way more than America to secure allied victory in the second world war.

No it's not simple. Britain imposed an embargo on France, France did likewise on Britain, America could just as readily have declared war on France but didn't. Why? Because America saw the chance for territorial gain.

Ok, re-phrase time, England is still mainly a White non-practicing Christian

More people go to church than go to football matches.

Democrats protested the Viet Nam war under LBJ, which caused him to war too. Clinton did get a free pass from the Democrats on Bosnia.

in a HOBBY radio activity over the last half century.

I wish I had saved a longish post made by another about the time
I started accessing this newsgroup. Someone had written the "new classes" of ham licenses, perhaps fifty-plus, delineating how so many were so "superior" to those of "lesser rank."
Such as the supermen of amateur radio "able to leap tall pileups in a single QSO." Hilarious!

TRUE! While these super-extra morsemen are busy hurting their shoulders by patting themselves on the back over their superiorness, the number of Expirations each month is just slightly more than the number of Newcomers (never before licensed). Not many, but it is consistent and has been so for the last 2 1/2 years. It's not a "statistical anomaly" anymore. Amateur radio is getting "poorer"
as a result.

Advertising revenue - the fuel that feeds the periodical fires - has been dropping for over a decade. Two major independent publishers had to drop out of the business. The league wants more money...to "keep the faith" (in the Church of St. Hiram?). Way too many hams are busy with a "Let's Pretend" fantasy (almost palpable) about their glorious service to the nation (as radio hobbyists) and wearing virtual uniforms (unseen by ordinary mortals) of glory and honor in their morsemanship a vital asset in the War Against Terrorism! [I kid you not, some comments were made in 05-235 saying that very thing] The "richness" is in the tales of fantasy they generate, NOT a commodity that generates any sort of revenue.

Jimmie just said "major typo alert!"

He acknowledged a MAJOR mistake in posting as a "typographical error" but that is apparently okay for him to do. It's not okay for any of us to do it...if we do it, we get reminders of it for the next five years, negative critique, accusations of "not

Not to worry. He will rationalize the "worst" somehow, probably based on "what the FCC did 37 years ago" or his getting a license at age 14 or getting a college degree without having a car or being a "manufacturer of amateur radio equipment" in the 1990s using recycled vacuum tube technology. Whatever he's done is guaranteed to be "better" than what anyone else has done, whether avocationally or occupationally. <shrug>

ARRL still doesn't "represent" any more than one in five U.S. amateur radio licensees. They barely made one in four a while back. They've been nothing but a MINORITY representative organization all along. ARRL has NEVER "represented" those who might want to join amateur radio through licensing...they just dictate to everyone what newcomers must think and do.

If the ARRL truly wanted to "represent" all U.S. radio amateurs, they should quit going around with their familiar arrogant posturing of "we know what is best for the rest of you."

FCC of the future: "Here are your allocated bands, use all allocated modes anywhere. No bandplans. Enjoy your options.
Try not to mess up comms of others and follow the technical requirements."

That's really all that's needed for a HOBBY. Those who need control, control, and compex fastidious little sub-band planning should go to Dr. Phil or join a federal comms agency.

Since I've been told the FAA grants amateur radio licenses, not the FCC, I may have to start writing the FAA. :-)

I'm finally getting the picture. Jim asks the question if it is possible to "serve in other ways?"

Not that HE served in other ways, mind you, but "other people may have served in other ways."

Jim remains a no server in any category.

W6TTB introduced his method in the 50's (that is, 1950's).

Jim lost priveleges.

Being 11/12th right makes one a "LIAR!"

Riley allowed the Radio Commando's to live on.

There are three ITU regions, so the clock divided by three leaves each region with an 8 hour window of opportunity, though it may take Hans only one hour to setup the conf. call.

Guess who supported Carl's nomination? Tried to get the board, executive committee and everyone else to change their minds?

Hint: Someone who's an ARRL member and lives in the same division as Carl.....

That's more than NCI represents - by an order of magnitude or more.

Gee, Len, you have the same arrogant attitude, even though you've never even been a radio amateur!

I see.

Gee, Len, you've told us over and over and over that you were only interested in getting rid of the Morse Code test. Now it seems there's a lot more to you're agenda - only one class of license, less written testing, no subbands-by-mode, no subbands-by-bandwidth, no bandplans.

Also no hams under the age of 14 years.

And you say the ARRL is "arrogant"!!!!
> Since I've been told the FAA grants amateur radio licenses, not

Well, Len, that was a typo I made. I wrote FCC when I meant to write

FAA.
My bad - just mistake.

Know why it sticks out so much? Because it's so unusual!

Now, about typos....

Was it a typo when you told K8MN to 'shut the hell up, you little USMC feldwebel' ?

Was it a typo when you wrote, almost 6 years ago, that you were going for Extra right out of the box?

Was it a typo when you lectured a US Coast Guard radio operator on his military service as a radio operator in the classic "sphincters post"?

Was it a typo when you wrote that all amateurs with expired-but-in-the-grace-period licenses could legally operate their amateur radio stations?

Was it a typo when you accused the ARRL and some VEs of 'very mild fraud' because of the licensing of some young children? (You never presented any evidence of fraud other than the ages of the children)

Was it a typo when you twice accused a developer/contractor in your area of 'payola' to the zoning commission - and the commission accepting it?

Or are you just following your profile?

The entire USA amateur service lost in a big way, but you find a way to personalize it.

Yeh, yeh, yeh. Using the same logic, if the FCC were conviced that a Morse Code exam were still a good idea, they would have a specification for Morse Code in the regulations.

Just because no one at the FCC is paying attention doesn't mean that the present rules are worthwhile.

Presently, every mode and every power limit privilege is permitted to General, Advanced, and Extra licensee. That means that the Advanced and Extra exams are arbitrary and redundant.

You need to have REAL distinctions is Testing Material VS Priveleges
between the license classes.

Those distinctions do not presently exist.

The knowledge and skill required to operate 1,500 watts of CW at 14.024 is EXACTLY the same knowledge and skill required to operate 1,500 watts
at 14.026

You think I want a 49 question exam? Hi!

BTW, many of the exams are 49 or 48 or 47 questions because of the bad questions presently in the QP.

It's always an ultimatum strawman with you, isn't it?

Sorry, but no one proclaimed you King Jim of Amateur Radiodom.

Use the present VE system, 50 question exam (or 49 questions if you must), no code test.

Thanks for playing.

I don't intend to convincee the FCC to give free upgrades. I don't intend to convince the FCC to accept one class of license. I don't intend to convince the FCC to do anything other than keep closed-out classes until they disappear by attrition.

I -expect- good government.

I -expect- the FCC to eliminate arbitrary and redundant licensing requirements and license classes.

The FCC looks foolish for not having dealt with these issues already.

Whelp, Brain...Once again you've overstepped your mouth again.

On occassions too numerous to count I've supported NCT's within Any suggestion that I somehow "look down" on or otherwise assume

I don't know that "conference calls" are needed either. With tossing
e-mail back and forth, it wouldn't take longer than a week and nobody has to physically travel to an in-person meeting...nor pay any per diem.

If tried in an 8-hour period that leaves out 16 hours for two-thirds of the globe. Nobody gonna get "friendly" if they have to be up between 11 PM through 7 AM the next day LOCALLY.

Yes, Hans, "smoky back room".

Guess I should have included the "DEVIL'S ADVOCATE = ON" indicator for that one, because you missed the point. My bad.

Look at how the ARRL is perceived by some hams, just for producing proposals. Like the "regulation by bandwidth" thing. The ARRL Board is frequently accused of "smoky back room" behavior - and tney're elected!
Do you think an unelected IARU committee would fare any better?

If an IARU committee were given the power to make bandplans that became the defacto regulations, can't you hear the shouting?

I simply disagree with the idea that "market forces" should set bandplans.
We've seen what happens when some things are not adequately regulated.

And the FCC has stated that if you violate the bandplans, you may be prosecuted for violation of Part 97.

Nope to neither.

I've not threatened you nor have I lied about bandplans being enforced by law.

The FCC says we are required to implement both good engineering practice in the establishment and operation of our stations, and we are to implement "good amateur practice" in the establishment and operation of our stations.

The FCC has said that compliance with bandplans establishes good amateur practice.

Violation of that caveat will get you "violated".

That's only partially true. One can "violate" the band plans and not necessarily be considered a candidate for enforcement action. It generally needs to be in combination with other factors. Afterall look at every contest. In general, there are many operations in "violation" of the bandplan. In voice contests, the operators do not stay out of the SSTV segment. In CW contests, they do not stay out of the RTTY segment. RTTY contestors spread out just like everyone else and do not stay in the RTTY segment.

If a person makes sure the frequency is not in use and is legal by regulation for that form of operation, they will not be penalized for not following the band plan.

Absolutely correct, Dee...

It's just like speeding...Don't do it in a school zone or right in front of a cop, and it's not likely to draw the ire of the cops...But make a point of being an idiot about it, and you're going to get your chops busted for it.

Yes...the rowdy and the reckless.

But beware the "Feeble Five."

Leonard H. "Lennie" Anderson. Allegedly an electronics "engineer" and "radio professional". Not a licensed Amateur, but has spent almost a decade telling Amateurs how they SHOULD be conducting their business. Has literally spammed the FCC ECFS with multiple "reply comments" that are nothing more than verbose personal attacks on anyone who Lennie remotely deems as having made a good presentation of facts on issues he holds a contrary opinion. (Search ECFS for "Leonard H. Anderson" and see what I mean). He spent one tour in post WW2 Japan as an Army radio mechanic and now knows all there is to know about "HF operating"...Don't believe me? Just ask him! He's also an "expert" on WW2 civil defense, child rearing, emergency communications, aerial navigation, medical terminology and practice, and now real estate zoning. Hint: He's too young to have served in CD, has no children, is not involved in REACT, let alone any "emcomm", is not a pilot, does not now nor ever held a medical or nursing license, and does not hold a relators license. Lennie's list of what he "isn't" is lengthy, considered his many profound pontifications on those "isn'ts".

Frank Gilliland. Frankie's not an Amateur either, but he was a "amateur" Marine. Seems his only purpose in THIS forum is to try and undermine anything I have to say or do by claiming that since he spent one tour in the USMC himself, he "knows" all about other Marines...However Frankie didn't make it through his one and only tour unscathed...Seems Frankie was a discipline problem the whole time he was in and was court martialed not once, but twice. Two court martials in one four-year enlistment. For one who was in the Corps and knows how many other "non-judicial" and other "local" punishments there are for minor infractions, I am impressed as to just how big a PITA Frankie must have been that they used court martials rather than those alternatives. he continues his PITA conduct into his USENET life. This is his one and only opportunity to "take a swing" at a Staff NCO and not get a THIRD court martial in his SRB. Frankie claims to be a close friend of LtCol Oliver North and to have "resources you don't even begin to understand" when it comes to the Armed Forces, yet can't seem to follow simple references to public information. Frankie's the RRAP version of the drunk at the end of the bar at the VFW or American Legion post.

Brian "The Brain" P. Burke, N0IMD. Brian is Lennie's puppet boy. Lennie says "dance" and Brain is all too happy to let him pull the strings and follow his lead. Has publically expressed "admiration" and "support" for Lennie despite Lennie's countless documented lies and intentionally deceitful anti-Amateur Radio rhetoric. Brain also claims to have operated from Somalia during operation "Restore Hope" in the 90's, however can't seem to come up with a single callsign or QSL card from anyone he "worked". In any case, he may have worked them, however not legally. He had no authorization to do so. Brain is also known for such trivial radio discussion "faux pas" as "unlicensed devices play the major role in emergency comms" and "ARES won't be able to respond to a major disaster", among other silliness. he claims to have been in the USAF MARS program, yet can't seem to figure out how to take my old callsign to verify my past participation...Of course anytime any of the Feeble Five are provided some readily researchable reference to prove what they've been told, they then demand that others "scan" a copy of documents to "prove" it.

Todd "Toiddie" Daugherty, N9OGL. Todd is a combination of a "Saturday Night Live" version of Howard Stern on the Amateur airways, with just a bit of PeeWee Herman thrown in for flavor. He purports to operate an "information bulletin" station yet refers to all of his broadcasting as "shows", and clearly uses these to broadcast his personal opinion and rhetoric, not "information". Almost 40, he's living at home and sopping up all the resources he can from mumsy and pops while they are still able to do it. Todd's biggest rants center around (1) his inability to obtain an LPFM license for his non-existant "company", (2) his illegal use of the Amateur service to take the place of the LPFM license he didn't get, and now (3) his BBS sites for the promulgation of kiddy-porn anime. I wish him well since there's a recent news release of a guy sentenced by a FEDERAL court for promulgating cartoon-style kiddy-porn. Of course like all kiddy-porners, he claims it's his "Constitutional" right to promulgate kiddy-porn.

Lastly there's Mark C."i ma not a lier" Morgan, KB9RQZ. Mark is a very troubled, disturbed fellow with numerous anger management and perversion issues that are unresolved. He's an admitted former mental health patient, and frankly he needs to be a CURRENT patient. His posts are legend for his butchering of the English language and his stubborn refusal to use a spellchecker. He does, however, claim an IQ of over 248. Mark also brags on his use of intentional deceit and lies as "natural and normal" and insists that lying and deceit are traits to be taught to children. His grandest use of this was his insistence that he was a drafted officer (a Colonel, no less...) in the US Army Chemical Corps, and that despite his avowed sexual perversions was not allowed to "retire" or "resign" from his unit. The story unravels before it really gets going because Markie would have only been 7 or 8 years old as the last Viet Nam era conscriptees were being mustered OUT (not in). All of this in order to try and gain some "points" in this USENET forum since he knows I am prior service enlisted USMC. He "figured" I'd be "impressed" by a functionally illiterate draftee officer (uhhhh...yeah...right...). Since then we've been subjected to threads of alleged stalking, death threats, "elder abuse", etc. Markie just completed a seven day stretch wherein he loaded the NG with just under 400 such threads or reply threads. He is now forging e-mail addresses in order to manufacture extra 'accounts' with which to get around Google's posting limits and spam the NG even more. He's presently manufacturing posts in this forum with my callsign and that of my wife, Amy, W5AMY.

I am sure their responses to/about me will be predictable.

73 and welcome to USENET Amateur Radio Hell!

But more than that, we've seen what happens when some things are over-regulated.
No competition generally brings stagnation, resistance to progressive initiatives, and eventual marginalization. Like what's happening to ARRL and Amateur Radio.

The fact of the matter is, Lennie, that more often than not, you either refuse to admit your errors, or even worse, defend them with lengthy, windy pontifications intended to obfuscate them.

Jim's character doesn't seem to permit him to act that way.

I see you're still using diminutives that aren't directed at you.
Of course your sock puppet does nothing to suggest otherwise to you, yet presumes to chastise others for not engaging in such conduct.

What's that term you're always using...."double standard"...?!?!

You're a ham and you don't even know what "73" means? Maybe Len was

K1MAN ESSAY - ES051212B -

Three Classes of Americans

1. Everybody else.

2. Yuppies

3. Wannabe Yuppies

All of life is governed by Jack Carlton's "Pecking Order Theory." Go where you will, there will be natural pressure to fall into some very definite "pecking order." If you bring along your own "pecking order," and follow THAT instead, there will, of course, be friction. This is where the "wisdom" of "When in Rome, do as the Romans do" comes from.

In the movie "The Great Escape," the German Colonel running the elite German prison camp asks the American flier if all Americans are so insolent? The reply was: "Just about 99%" So, America itself is a giant macro "pecking order." All the other micro "pecking orders" lie within.

The trick is to find a "pecking order" (or orders) that best suit you. Not so easy in a world where there are so many models to choose from. The Ten Commandments would be a good start!

A huge problem in the United States today is too little quality time being spent by parents with their children. America's great "experiment" exacerbates this problem greatly. Here, almost anything goes, and natural "market forces" sort all of it out and with many bruises and bumps along the way. America is not for the faint of heart.

A related problem is the lack of role models for kids. America will get it right, however. This will take some time as we continue to struggle with all the strong market forces that have a free play in our rough and tumble country, land of the free and home of the brave.

Animation Porn, even lolicon is LEGAL and in 2001 the US Supreme Court ruled that "virtual child porn" (which includes animation lolicon) WAS protected by the First Amendment. Beside what are going to do about it??? NOTHING, grow up steve you little worm Farnsworth. Introduced his method in the 1950's, 110 years or so after Morse, about the same time that the military and civilian world was abandoning Morse. The ARRL begins implementing Farnsworth w/o notice in the late 80's, makes a public notice about 10 years later.

Perhaps he thinks the FCC hires civilians and puts them to work. Then after sufficient time has passed, the FCC says the applicant has "earned" "thier" license.

Not at all. One can only imagine what Jim thinks of Veterans after some of his more recent postings. An one can only imagine why he thought himself too precious to serve... Since he has no answers, only questions.

Yeh, well, I've heard it from other no-servers. Jim has no answers, only questions.

How? Extras did not lose any privileges back then. Others could get back the "lost" privileges by taking a test or two.

Nobody lost any bands, power or modes except Novices, who lost 2 meter 'phone.

The rules changes of 1968 and 1969 affected me at the time.

Nope.

FCC specifically mentions the need for a 3 level license system in the NPRM.

In your opinion, yes, but not in my opinion. And not in FCC's opinion.

But let's explore your statement there a bit.

"Presently, every mode and every power limit privilege is permitted to General, Advanced, and Extra licensee."

That's true, as far as it goes. But it's also true that, presently, every mode and every power limit privilege is permitted to Technician, Technician Plus, General, Advanced, and Extra licensees.

So by your logic (not mine), the General, Advanced
and Extra exams are arbitrary and redundant.

> You need to have REAL distinctions is Testing Material VS Priveleges
> between the license classes.

There are real distinctions in the tested material. The distinctions in privileges are less clear.

> Those distinctions do not presently exist.

Sure they do. The trouble you perceive is that they're not directly related to the additional privileges granted.

> The knowledge and skill required to operate 1,500 watts of CW at 14.024
> is EXACTLY the same knowledge and skill required to operate 1,500 watts
> at 14.026

How do you know? Have you ever done it? I think not!

The knowledge and skill required to operate 1500 watts of CW on 14.024 includes Morse Code skill, too.

But let's suppose your claim about 14.026 is true.

Then wouldn't it also be true that the knowledge and skill required to operate
1,500 watts of CW on 144.026 MHz is EXACTLY the same knowledge and skill
required to operate 1,500 watts on 14.026 MHz?

And wouldn't it also be true that the knowledge and skill required to operate
1,500 watts of CW on 14.026 MHz is EXACTLY the same knowledge and skill required to operate 1,500 watts on 13.976 MHz?

Why can't Technicians operate on 14.026? Why can't hams operate on 13.976?

And while we're on the subject....

Why are hams only allowed 1500 watts output? Why not 3000, or 5000, or 10,000?

Up until about 20 years ago, all US hams were allowed up to 1000 W input on AM voice. With plate modulation and a final amplifier efficiency of 75%, that could mean 750 watts of carrier output, and 3000 watts peak output at full modulation.
The 1500 watt rule cut that in half. Why?

Actually that's not true.

The 1998 ARRL proposal would have eliminated the 13 and 20 wpm code tests and replaced them with a 12 wpm code test. IIRC, General code test would have gone to 5 wpm in their proposal.

> > > Sorry you feel that way.

Not at all. It's about reasonable and attainable standards.

Is the 50 question Extra written exam too difficult to be considered "reasonable and attainable"? After all, that exam is all that separates a General and an Extra anymore (since April 2000).

I'm simply pointing out where your line of reasoning leads.

You want to go back to the past for one little piece but not the rest.

> Sorry, but no one proclaimed you King Jim of Amateur Radiodom.

I've never claimed to be an expert, king, or anything other than what I am.

Apparently my knowledge and skills intimidate you, so that you have to attack me personally rather than argue facts and opinions.

No one proclaimed you king either.

Is someone who expresses an opinion here somehow claiming a royal role?

> Use the present VE system, 50 question exam (or 49 questions if you

> Thanks for playing.

IOW, you want to lower the standards from three written tests totalling 120 questions, and one code test, to just one 50 question written test.

For all US Amateur Radio privileges.

Technician exam earns all legal modes and all legal power, too.
See where your line of reasoning leads?

To you - but not to FCC.

> > You're the one who supports lowering the standards

"Jaundiced"? Or accurate?

The testing standards have been lowered again and again in the past 25-30 years.
But that's not enough for you - you want them to be lower still. I disagree, that's all.
But it's not me you have to convince - it's FCC.
> > --

Actually not - what you want is full amateur privileges for less written testing than is currently required for a General license, without any code test.

Then please don't expect FCC to give free upgrades. Don't expect FCC to implement less than 3 classes of licenses. And don't expect FCC to lower the testing standards any more than is already proposed.

Aren't you getting it? Your party has controlled the White House for 17 of the past 25 years. The same party that gave us a B-movie actor for 8 years and now a failed oilman for another 8.

IIRC, the White House nominates the FCC Commissioners....

IOW, you expect the FCC to agree with you on everything without you having to convince them.

To whom? Perhaps you should tell the FCC they look foolish...

Not often, even when it is cited, the violation has to be deliberate, persistent, and outrageous.

Listen to the CW bands on any CW contest weekend, or the Phone bands on any Phone contest weekend, and you'll find the bandplans exuberantly ignored by hundreds of stations.

Look at the bandplan for 160M with a window 20kHz wide at 1830-1850 reserved for intercontinental QSO's only. Just for shits and grins I just tuned that segment and found 6 NA-to-NA contacts ongoing. Do ya think they'll get tagged by Riley?

The important difference is, Fred, that our Royals do not rule the country... ie they don't make decisions to go to war, put up taxes, increase the price of fuel, etc. Your president does and over here most Brits would not agree with his attitude to the Iraq war, especially as it appears to have a religious justification in his mind.

I've visited the USA several times over the past few years since the Iraq business started and I've heard much criticism of your Republican government. Bush does not have the whole nation behind him as he likes to think.

You could be correct. And if you're correct then it is the General and Advanced licensees that are getting a nearly free ride. They must be stripped of privs.

I understand the reason for the split in privs between the Tech/Tech+ and the G/A/E licensees. The reason for that barrier no longer exists, but the exam and licensing schema has not kept pace. Time to perform a top-down review, starting with basis and purpose.

The Technician exam is weak on HF issues. What do you think?

There are differences in the behavior of RF at VHF frequencies. An environmental assessment will begin to expose that.

Again you bring up difficulty. Why?

Arbitrary is not reasonable.

Redundant is not reasonable.

Superfluous is not reasonable.

What is necessary?

privileges.

You saw where it leads. It leads to the elimination of arbitrary, redundant, and superfluous licensing exams, classes, and privileges.

No. I've already shown that the VE system could implement the exam.
No one would have to travel 175 miles to their nearest FCC office.
I've already shown that the FCC plan to leave presently licensed Novices and Advanced amateur to the actuarial tables is OK with me.

Why do you say otherwise?

> > Sorry, but no one proclaimed you King Jim of Amateur Radiodom.

You like arbitrary, redundant and superfluous exams, classes, and privileges?

Apparently they do not. The mode chosen to provide the example of arbitrary privs was done for your ease of understanding, not mine. And you quickly grasped the concept and took it to its logical extension, which would mean a freefall of your prestige and stature in the amateur community. That scared you.

> No one proclaimed you king either.

Remember, I am not the one seeking power and prestige through amateur radio. I've been a proponent of the one license (classless) service for a long, long time.

> Is someone who expresses an opinion here somehow claiming a > royal role?

I'm glad that you easily grasp the concept that these are, after all, only our opinions. Not "Statements of Fact," nor "Assertions of Fact."
Expressing an opinion does not make one a liar.

However, you need to realize that I advocate a review of ALL government that presently exists, not just amateur radio. The review should start with, "What is the purpose of government?" Refer to the U.S.
Constitution and the Bill of Rights often.

The 50 question (or 49) exam was your proposal.

What is necessary?

Are 200 questions necessary?

Helluva ENTRY level license, huh?

Yes, I do. And the Technician class is an artifact left over from an ITU rule that was kluged together when the Novice Class went bust.

Necessary rules. Necessary exam(s). Necessary license classes all tied to privileges granted.

The plan can be put into effect without harassing people who don't want to do anything with their existing licenses.

You want the FCC to intern these folks? I understand that Ft Chaffee is underutilized.

scarecrow out there?

What is proposed is the elimination of the code exam. You're welcome convincing proposal?

Hi! You angry white males are all the same.

You thought the '98 NPRM was clearly written?

You thought the '03 RO dealt with reorganization sufficiently?

You think the present Code question is able to be dealt with in a vacuum?

You think the present inconsistencies in the amateur regulations, exams, licenses, and privileges is healthy for the ARS?

Yeh, the FCC looks stupid to me.

I think he may be using the tradition of defining a person's religion by what his parents' religion was. In other words, xians claim all babies born to xian parents, even though the parents may not even have been particularly religious and were simply born to parents who also were claimed by the xian church. Same with moozlums, any baby unfortunate to be born into that cult is claimed as a member for life.

BTW, I was born to xian parents who also claimed me for their cult and the defining moment in my life was when they coerced me into joining their church at age 13. I haven't been to church since, and share Marilyn Manson's hope that I'll be remembered as the person who brought an end to xianity.

Hail Satan!

"Even though the god in all of these religions is basically the same, each regards the way chosen by the others as reprehensible, and to top it all, religionists actually PRAY for one another!
They have scorn for their brothers of the right-hand path because their religions carry different labels, and somehow this animosity must be released. What better way than through 'prayer'! What a simperingly polite way of saying: 'I hate your guts,' is the thinly disguised device known as praying for your enemy! Praying for one's own enemy is nothing more than bargain-basement anger, and of a decidedly shoddy and inferior quality!"

Hey Toiddie...If you can bring YOUR mindless trash in here under

You and Lennie go to great lengths to dismiss any argument about

Peter, you have to understand a subtlety of the USA government. Even though some members of the Congress criticize the President publically for the IRAQ war, the Congress actually controls the war. They pay for it!! The Congressional criticism is simply to posture for votes in the next election.
- - - - -
Reference: US Constitution Article 1, Section 7 Clause 1:

"All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills."
- - - - -

If the Congress was really interested in bringing the USA troops home all they have to do is stop the funding.

The most powerful person in Washington DC is NOT the President!! It is the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Why? Because ALL SPENDING [$$$$$$] authorizzation MUST initiate in the House of Representatives. The Speaker of the House assigns committee membership. The committees establish and implement policy by how they authorize spending. The full Congress votes on and approves how the money will be spent!

So, IRAQ is NOT Bush's war! It is a USA war. It is bought and paid for by the representatives of the people. And the people are NOT unanimous but are a majority. That disagreement is the basic strength of the USA form of government. I can criticize my government as a political right.

But you forget one thing, as I've stated many times before, there's a lot more to that LPTV deal it then you know. Secondly my "company" as you claim isn't a business, it's a club, it always has been, since 1983. It started in 1983 as DDC-TV, we produced programs for the local public acess channel, and for school. Most of the people that were in our group back then was also part of the local theater group called "the Spotlight Players" In 1985 We started Langley Park Studio's for the sole purpose to get people interested in theater and the preforming arts. In 1987 the Spotlight Player's disbanned so we were all that was left when it can to theater and the arts. In the 1990's we changed it to Langley Park Telecommuniation, because we not only wanted to promote theater and the preforming arts but telecommunication as well. Langley Park has done a hell of lot more work then what you think. We've had people who has gone through our group only to later go on into other aspects of the industry. We had one guy name Joey who was with our group and now has his own rock band (Last time I talked to him they had cut an album). Another one named Matt, went to the University of Florida and got his degree in theater. We've also taught a number of people radio and electronics only to later move on into the military and Universities to continue their studies in that field. So steve, I don't really give a shit what you think, cause frankly you don't know what the hell your talking about.

Hmmm...in that case I'm getting a disturbing picture of Jimmie

NOT a good picture for the ARS.

Tsk, this isn't a question of Presidential Politics.

In that case, what of George Walker ever going beyond the Air Guard service? :-(

Sorry, but the last REAL SERVING IN THE MILITARY President was James Earle Carter, USN, and George Herbert Walker Bush, USNR, and Gerald Rudolph Ford, USNR. [living that is]

None of them had any direct contact with amateur radio.

Speaking seriously, I don't see that either 98-143 nor the resulting FCC 99-412 Memorandum Report and Order were all that bad as regulatory items. The U.S. amateur rules had reached a Gordian Knot of complexity of Byzantine license classes and morris goad testing on the eve of the
new millennium and it was time to unravel the Knot.

Too many old-timers in the amateur radio hobby had become victims of their own delusions of grandeur...wanting to be "professional amateurs"
with all the rank-status-title-privilege that had been politically lobbied for by guess-who in the regulations.

The Great Radio Spirit visits Jimmie regularly to "wind up"

Jimmie needs the spirit of the late John Houseman of the "Paper Trail" TV show..."we did it the old-fashioned way, we EARNED it!"

Geez, all that foo-fah-rah over "The TEST!" The law establishes a licensing system and folks are required to pass a license test (sort of like hunting and fishing licenses) in order to be legal about their activity. No, passing it becomes A RITE OF PASSAGE or the equivalent of a PhD Thesis or some kind of SUPERNATURAL EXPERIENCE!

Too many hams have established a lot of bullshit ju-ju to the test and the resulting rank-status-title-privilege.

I was imagining his performances in here to be the equivalent of James Mitchum's creepy "preacher" in an old, scary black-and-white film released in the 1950s. That character had L-O-V-E on one hand, H-A-T-E on the other...liked to off folks that didn't

"VA?" "GI Bill?" None of those applied to Jimmie Noserve.

Since Dudly can't prove he served anyplace, I doubt that Dud could could have gotten any GI bill other than from a military store for buying all those old medals.

Lots of us radio pros without amateur licenses just didn't bother to get an amateur license...not necessarily as a result of "changes of 1968 or 1969." What the heck, I'd already started 15 and 14 years before in HF comms where the operating environment was a HELLUVA LOT TOUGHER on all concerned than any amateur activity.

Not "arbitrary and redundant" for Jimmie. He made it. He loves it.

Problem is, Jimmie doesn't think that others can think differently so he doesn't think about the thousands of newcomers who MIGHT want to get into amateur radio.

NPRM 05-143 is SOLELY regarding the elimination of the code test from the Commission's regulations for licensing in U.S. amateur radio.

NPRM 05-143 DOES NOT CONCERN ITSELF with ANY NEW PROPOSALS for license classes, rank, status, title, privilege, prestige, or honor and glory in the amateur service.

POLITICS. The present system of U.S. amateur radio regulations, at least up to the year 2000, was lobbied for by the ARRL. The Reading Room at the FCC is full of documents attesting to that.

But, Jimmie is a PARTY MAN. The league can do no wrong.

>Coma?

No to all the above. FCC just doesn't think that amateur radio deserves their maximum-mission attention in their Congress-law-
mandated task of regulating ALL United States civil radio.

When the Commission does get around to regulating amateur radio,
it does so in Memorandum Reports and Orders which are extremely detailed and explicit (and sometimes lengthy) to their task of regulating all U.S. civil radio.

A problem with folks like Jimmie is that they are way too focussed on their own agendas and their own personal desires to look at it from the perspective of an agency governing for ALL the people, not some smaller special-interest groups favoring morse code.

Jimmie sees only what he WANTS to see. Such as "footnotes" which he once thought were "wrong-format" things in other arguments.

The time may not be ripe just yet, Brian. Let's wait until the FCC decides what to do about NPRM 05-143 and issue a Memorandum Report and Order on it.

There's been two whole years of 18 Petitions commented on at length since the end of WRC-03 and now NPRM 05-143 which can settle the morse code testing for a license issue.

The VEC QPC is responsible for generating written exam

Jimmie is just doing his "message-points wordplay" thing. It is (or should be) absolutely NO difference in OPERATING any radio transmitter physically. The only difference is in the human regulations in regard to technical requirements.

Jimmie with newsgroup wordplay again. About this point, Hans will jump in saying you are "simply mistaken" and babbling about how the "IARU and ITU" are different or other semi-sweet non-sequitur.

The next World Radiocommunication Conference is in 2007. I don't know if the location is fixed yet (WRC-03 changed location from it's originally planned place). There's an FCC 8th Meeting on WRC-07 changed to 25 Jan 2006...see the Federal Register of today on details and contact person.

If Jimmie wants to really go high-power, it's his electric bill.
And his real estate broker's bill and re-locating his station.

Actually, it was Carl Stevenson and Bill Sohl making an ex-partite (?) presentation before the FCC. :-)

Regardless, "the 1998 ARRL proposal" is OLD HISTORY. It doesn't apply to anything NOW. The current NPRM is 05-143 and concerning the elimination of the code test for license testing. The ONLY ARRL "proposal" is their Petition RM-10867 which was "granted in part" as mentioned in NPRM 05-143.

But...Jimmie is a Believer in the league and thinks the league can do no wrong.

Sounds reasonable to me for what is essentially a HOBBY activity.

Absolutely...by law in fact. The generation of ALL license test questions and answers is performed by the VEC. Says so in Part 97.

Jimmie lives in the past. Period. He has been bringing up 1998 "proposals" when he should be bringing up 2004 Petitions on the current NPRM 05-143.

By WRC-07 Jimmie might STILL be babbling about "the ARRL 1998 proposal!" :-)

Jimmie doesn't WANT to see where anything leads. <shrug>

Holy Judas H. Cottonpicker, but lil Jimmie done made hisself more pompously arrogant (and egotistical) than anyone else!

The elimination of the code test for any U.S. amateur radio license WILL REDUCE BRAGGING RIGHTS OF MORSEMANSHIP BY THE PCTA MORSEMEN. Logical extension.

NO PRIVILEGES ARE REMOVED by the adoption of NPRM 05-143 as an R&O intact.

ALL that is left is the bragging rights to those who ONCE passed a high-rate code test for their license.

Ah, but Jimmie NEEDS the nobility of title and status and prestige.

Only those who still believe in a feudalistic system of rank-status-title-privilege in what is essentially a HOBBY.

If I want better peerage, I go to my opthalmologist for an eyeglass exam...so that I can "peer" at things better. :-)

Unfortunately, some in here wish to abrogate those Rights in favor of what They want... :-( everyone could just accept Jimmie as the God-granted Ruler of

Why does the test material need to be directly related to the privileges granted? It is quite common in life that they are not directly related but is instead, something that is very desireable. In ham radio, that would be spectrum and power. The goal of the FCC is, based on their comments in various NPRMs and the goals and purpose stated in Part 97, is that hams continue to increase their knowledge and engage in self training. So they tie increase technical knowlegde to increase spectrum and power privileges.

>> I -expect- the FCC to eliminate arbitrary and redundant licensing

To achieve that, the FCC would need to totally redefine the basis and purpose of amateur radio. One of the elements is self training and technical knowlegde. You encourage that by using increased privileges (spectrum and power) to get people to study and take additional tests.

They do not look foolish when you view the tests and privileges in terms of the basis and purpose of amateur radio.

You've posted many, many words about your "superiorness" here, telling us all about your Exploits In Professional Radio-Electronics.

If anybody's hurting from self-patting it's you...;-)

Is it? How do you know, Len? And why does it matter to you?

You're not a radio amateur, and it's very unlikely you'll ever become one.

You don't supply the amateur radio community with any product or service. You're only obvious involvement with amateur radio in the past decade or two has been to spam the FCC and usenet with your verbiage.

Let's check the numbers....

These are the numbers of current, unexpired
amateur radio licenses held by individuals
on the stated dates:

As of May 14, 2000:

Novice - 49,329
Technician - 205,394
Technician Plus - 128,860
General - 112,677
Advanced - 99,782
Extra - 78,750

Total Tech/TechPlus - 334,254

Total Novice/General/Advanced/Extra - 340,538

Total all classes - 674,792

As of December 13, 2005:

Novice - 26,742 [decrease of 22,587]
Technician - 274,091 [increase of 68,697]
Technician Plus - 44,221 [decrease of 84,639]
General - 134,886 [increase of 22,209]
Advanced - 74,191 [decrease of 25,591]
Extra - 107,302 [increase of 28,552]

Total Tech/TechPlus - 318,312 [decrease of 15,942]

Total Novice/General/Advanced/Extra - 343,121 [increase of 2583]

Total all classes - 661,433 [decrease of 13,359]

These totals do not include licenses
that have expired but are in the grace period.
They also do not include club, military, RACES
or other station-only licenses.

How about that - the combined Technician/Technician Plus number dropped by almost 16,000 while the other classes increased by over 2500 - even though the Novice and Advanced are not available for new issue anymore.

Your comments were a laff riot too, Len!

You've characterized amateur radio as "a HOBBY". So what does it matter to you if "a HOBBY" "grows poorer"? Or even disappears?

You clearly wrote that you were "going for Extra". Was that a typo?

Did you mean you weren't going to get an amateur license?

In your comments to FCC in 1999 you wrote that an age limit of 14 should exist for any class of amateur radio license. Was that a typo too?

If you didn't want either thing, why did you write what you did?
Were those things typos? If so, what did you mean to write? Where are the corrections?

Shall we look at what you actually wrote and you can explain what you meant that we didn't understand?

btw, speaking of the age of licensees - did you see that ex-KG6IRO is being fined $42,000 by FCC? He's 69 years old. Guess what class of amateur radio license he held before FCC revoked it.... (Hint: it wasn't the Amateur Extra)

> >> Tsk, Jimmie complains that I "don't read what he wrote"

You don't understand much of it, Len.

That was a typo, Len. A mistake. I wrote "FCC" when I meant to write
"FAA".

"MAJOR" mistake? How so?

> It's not okay

Well, Len, that was a typo I made.

I wrote "FCC" when I meant to write "FAA". My bad - just a mistake.

Know why it sticks out so much? Because it's so unusual!

Now, about typos....

Was it a typo when you told K8MN to 'shut the hell up, you little USMC feldwebel' ?

Was it a typo when you wrote, almost 6 years ago, that you were going for Extra right out of the box?

Was it a typo when you lectured a US Coast Guard radio operator on his military service as a radio operator in the classic "sphincters post"?

Was it a typo when you wrote that all amateurs with expired-but-in-the-grace-period licenses could legally operate their amateur radio stations?

Was it a typo when you accused the ARRL and some VEs of 'very mild fraud' because of the licensing of some young children? (You never presented any evidence of fraud other than the ages of the children)

Was it a typo when you twice accused a developer/contractor in your area of 'payola' to the zoning commission - and the commission accepting it?

Were all those things typos, Len? I don't see any corrections to them.

I corrected my FAA typo.

> >He's losing major ground on his lifetime > >achievement of being an Extra, and the worst is probably just around > >the corner.

Good heavens, I've much bigger achievements than the Amateur Extra license. It's just the one you two like to pick on - because you don't have such a license.....

> Not to worry. He will rationalize the "worst" somehow, probably Actually I was licensed at age 13, Len ;-). And I did get the degree in the way described.

Was it wrong of me to take advantage of that educational opportunity?

Am I not supposed to write about it?

> Whatever he's done is > guaranteed to be "better" than what anyone else has done, whether > avocationally or occupationally.

Why no, Len, I don't claim that everything I've done is "better".
That's
your game!

I've done some things you haven't. And you've done some things I haven't.

I'm better at some things than you are. And you're probably better at some things than I am.

See how simple that is?

What's so predictable about your response is that you'll jump all over a typo rather than discuss the actual arguments, facts and opinions presented.

If it were working, it would be evident on the air. But I'll encourage you to try a little practical experiment to see if you can detect the results in the real world.

You'll need the following materials for the experiment:

1. A reasonable sensitive receiver, hooked to a working antenna.
2. A blindfold.
3. A set of earphones.
4. No extreme hearing impairments.
5. A comfortable chair.

Seat your self at the receiver, and tune it to the TOP of a popular band with good propagation to the USA, probably 40 or 75 meters. Don the earphones and plug them in. Set the receiver RF gain full open and the AF gain at a comfortable level.

Now place your blindfold over your eyes.

Slowly tune the receiver down the band. If incentive licensing is working, when you cross over the General/Advanced boundary and again when you cross the Advanced/Extra boundary, you should detect a noticeable increase in the "training and technical knowlege" of the operators because of better/cleaner signals, more sophisticated technical discussions, and other evidence of better training and technical knowlege. If your ear does NOT detect this sort of evidence as you tune across those boundaries, then you can conclude (as I have) that incentive licensing is an abject failure.

Is that why the FCC gives ALL power priveleges to their ENTRY LEVEL LICENSEES?

I just want the FCC to start making sense.

Robert Mitchum. 1954. Night of the Hunter from the novel by Davis Grubb.
The author was from up the road in Moundsville. The story is set in this area.

Believing in him had nothing to do with it. He killed prostitutes and dancers because he thought they were evil and he killed widows for their money. The guy wasn't even a real preacher.

Don't you get anything right?

Even more preposterious, we were all in seven hostile actions together and met at the USO Show wherewe were entertained by Quitefine and Darkguard "performing in other ways." Then we all retired over two years early.

No wonder we haven't posted our 214's. Hi!

Great. The commencement of Incentive Licensing in amateur radio did not have any effect on you or Brian. Neither of you were participants in amateur radio in 1968-69.

The WRC's don't set a country's power limit. The Brits operate at 400w PEP output. The Finns used to have a limit of 600W PEP. They now may use 1000W PEP.

You seem to have trouble with anyone who has done anything which you cannot do. The fact remains that no matter how the FCC regs change regarding the morse testing issue, those of us who passed such a test have still passed it. Those of us proficient in the use of morse will retain a skill which you've not mastered. Those of us who are good operators will still be good operators. You're stuck with being Leonard H. Anderson.

...or we could just grant you your due, Leonid. You are an amateur radio non-entity attempting to set licensing qualifications for something in which you are not a participant. You are to amateur radio as a grand piano to a NASCAR race.

I haven't been in the group for very long but I haven't seen any reason to question your claim of military service. Dudly, OTOH, has provided -many- reasons to doubt his USMC 'career', and now also his EMT 'career'.

But you -have- provided a reason to question -your- interest in this discussion: Why, after declaring that you are not going to get drawn into this "game", do you continue to poke your beak into it? Did you also lie about your military service? Or are you jealous of all the attention Dudly is getting? Or trying to draw some fire away from a fellow nacho-cheese addict? Or just trying to shake your seasonal depression by starting a newsgroup skirmish?

As some of you know, I supported my bad habits for many years as a Navy Radioman, and quite frankly considered myself something of a hotshot operator. To set that stage..... I spent my early Navy years aboard destroyers in the 2nd and 6th fleets. The amount of traffic you handled was related to the seniority of your skipper, because senior skippers not only commanded their own ships, but also often had additional duties as task group commanders, etc. Our skipper at the time was CDR Grant "Flash" Gordon, and he was one of these 'senior' skippers. We made a couple of cruises to the Mediterranean and Capt Gordon was also CTU-60.2.5 which required our ship to guard the Sixth Fleet Task Group Commanders Net (nicknamed "Sixes Alfa"). Sixes Alfa was a high speed net, typical traffic speeds were 40WPM, and routine procedural speed in excess of 50WPM. At the time, I was one of only 23 radiomen in the Sixth Fleet who were fully qualified Net Control operators for that net. I go into all of this not to brag, but only to give you an idea of how big my 21-year-old ego was. If you were qualified to NCS "Sixes Alfa" (you got a fancy diploma style wallet certificate signed by the Fleet Commander) then you were pretty hot stuff.

Unlike today, in those days the Red Sea and Persian Gulf area was a quiet backwater without much military attention. The US Navy presence was something called "Middle East Force" and COMMIDEASFOR was a Rear Admiral whose flagship was a distinctly unwar-like AVP (seaplane tender) anchored at the Brit base on Bahrain. (K0DQ, Admiral Scott Redd (Retired), now an active contester and a high honcho in Dept of Homeland Security, once held that post) The rest of his fleet consisted of a couple of destroyers loaned to him from the Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean for tours of a couple months at a time to strut around and show the flag. Often we used that opportunity to also conduct joint training exercises with ships from allied navies in the SEATO and CENTO treaty organizations.

Our ship, USS Henley, DD762 drew that temporary assignment while I was aboard. To get from the Med over to the Persian Gulf requires transiting the Suez Canal, which was under Egyptian (they called themselves the UAR in those days) control. Ships transiting the canal were arranged in convoys, on a given day consisting perhaps of 10 or 15 ships, one convoy northbound and one southbound. These convoys met and passed each other about midway in the canal at a 'wide spot in the road' called "Great Bitter Lake". Each convoy carried an Egyptian civilian pilot who knew the waters and acted as our 'guide' in navigating the canal. If there was a warship in the convoy, they would carry the pilot and lead the group. These pilots were required to provide the canal "Traffic Control" with periodic position reports so that canal authorities could track our progress and coordinate the 'passing' of the two convoys at the wide spot. The circuit which handled this traffic was a CW circuit, and the ashore operator was an Egyptian civilian. This was not a busy circuit, so typically it was on 'speaker watch' while you attended to other more busy circuits, and only actually 'manned' the circuit when you had to send or receive a report.

Now picture me, hotshot NCS from "Sixes Alfa", keeping an ear on this pilots coordination circuit while handling traffic on another circuit. Across comes the call:

"NHXW DE SUQ K" ---

I put my regular military circuit on hold with a 'ZUJ' and impatiently called the 'lowly Egyptian civilian' at about 40WPM with a speed key

"SUQ DE NHXW QRQ K" ..... (QRQ my friends, is the inverse of QRS)

Bad move..... really bad and embarrassing move!

'Lowly civilian' at SUQ came back to me at a blistering speed I'm sure was 60WPM (or faster) of beautiful musical code (there were no electronic keyers in those days) of which I could copy no better than 50%.

I humbly sent a break signal, then a crisp and polite "QRS PSE", and the "Kind Sir" at SUQ slowed down to a stately 30WPM. To this day I have never sent another QRQ to ANYONE! (That guy may be still out there waiting for the impertinent sailor to challenge him again!)

Harold Hallikainen's website underwent a reorganization change in late October and my 10 MB PDF was there before that. The Pacific Stars and Stripes interview took place in 2002, most of it via e-mail with reporter Rick Chernitzer.

The first one is 20 pages and has lots of photos, a few of which are me as I was back then. Lots more of equipment that I OPERATED. There's three MORE papers on Harold's website, all generated and uploaded by myself.

If you wish to get anal-retentive on this, I can forward my digitized DD-214 and my digitized Honorable Discharge paper as further proof. I really don't see WHY but then some

WHAT HAVE WE SEEN FROM DUDLY THE IMPOSTER (ada K4YZ)?

NOT ONE THING

NO DIGITIZED DOCUMENTS OF ANY KIND FROM THE USMC.

NOT EVEN A SNAPSHOT OF HIM SOME TIME IN 18 YEARS OF "service"

What the FORK do you NEED for proof? A Power-Point Presentation?

Courier-hand-delivered, notarized documents?

As far as I'm concerned, the FBI, the CIA, the DIA, the IRS, Nuclear Regulatory Agency, the Social Security Administration, DCAS, Franchise Tax Board of California, and several large corporations have already accepted my presenting - handcarried - copies of my military service records which they have independently checked to federal archives.

Heh heh. During 18 years on the circuits at VCS, Halifax, I can relate to this. During part of that we were often required to copy long fishing reports from Russian trawlers operating under license within our 200 mile zone. These messages could run to 5000 words and more. You did not want to copy them slowly and the Russian ops (probably KGB-trained) were good. But when they were sending weather OBS (you know--the standard 5-figure group synoptic reports), they would just let fly. The messages we'd do at about 50wpm, but I think they were trying to see just how fast I could copy an OBS. Never did find one I couldn't get the first time. A year and a half up north on very fast point-to-point circuits sending upper air reports gave me that skill. But it's a lost art. Everything is satellite and RTTY nowadays.

But on the other end of the scale, I came across a vessel on 500khz one day with a callsign from a certain Caribbean country (not Cuba) that shall remain unnamed. His code was bad but I managed to get him off onto 480 and listening to me on 484. I was using an AEA Morsematic that would not slow below 5wpm and this joker kept sending QRS until I bottomed out. Now I simply cannot send morse with a handkey at less than about 10 and I keep winding up to 20 all the time even trying to do that. But I could keep the Morsematic going at 5. But not satisfied, he still insisted QRS. At that point I gave up. I mean 20 is minimum commercial speed and this joker was telling me he couldn't read me at 5 with perfect code!

So I said, "OM, if I QRS any more I am stopped." At that point the QSO was transferred to 2Mhz SSB. His English was better than his CW and his French actually understandable!

Not true ###HOLE, first there is a "comapny" mostly made up of amateur radio operators. Second the Application was dismissed after congress passed the Radio Broadcast Perservation Act of 2001. How would it be evident, Hans?

Can you tell a "state of the art" rig apart from a good old one that's 10, 20, 30 years
old just by its signal quality?

Can you tell my homebrew rig's signals apart from those from, say, an IC-7800 just
by listening to them?

Or maybe not. Your experiment has some real problems:

First, it assumes that hams with the various license classes stay only in their respective subbands, in that you won't find Extras in the Advanced and General parts, or Advanceds in the General parts, etc. But that's not how it works.

Second, a lot of the discussions heard aren't about technical subjects.
So the sample size is gonna be kinda small.

Third, most "modern" rigs and many "older" rigs have such good signal quality that you can't really tell much about the operator other than s/he knows enough not to yell into the mike or turn the gain up too far.

> If your ear does NOT detect this sort of

The problem is convincing FCC. See footnote 142 in the NPRM.

73 de Jim, N2EY

btw, loved that QRQ story.

IIRC, back in the 1980s I read a somewhat-similar story in "Air & Space" but of course the op requesting a QRQ was in an airplane. The ground station was in the Mediterranean - Egypt, I think. Somewhat earlier time - early 1950s.

Both great stories.

Entry level licensees do NOT have all power privileges. Technicians with code are an entry level license. On HF frequencies, they are limited to 200 watts output.

As Jim has already so ably answered, you cannot tell that sort of thing at all. There is no way to tell whether that signal is better/cleaner since propagation variables can impact signal quality too. There is no way to tell if a better signal is due to better knowledge or that the particular ham chooses to have his equipment maintained by a third party. I would expect less sophisticated discussions in the Advanced/Extra portions simply because the Generals may be more apt to be seeking knowledge where the Extras may be inclined to relax.

That's fine, Len. Nobody says you have to get ana amateur radio license. But it does seem a bit odd that you're expending so much time and energy on the requirements for a license you aren't going to get...

How was it "a HELLUVA LOT TOUGHER", Len? I saw your "My 3 Years" thing.

And why all the comparisons? You seem to feel a need to prove that you had it "TOUGHER" than anybody else.....

Len, I don't have any problem thinking others can think differently.
That
doesn't mean I must agree with them.

Lowering the requirements has not brought sustained growth to the Amateur Radio Service. There's a short-term surge of growth and then the numbers start to decline again. Not just here in the USA, either.

The Morse Code test will probably be eliminated by FCC in the near future. And we may see some short term growth. But I doubt the growth will be sustained. You and others are already setting the stage for more reductions in requirements - just as predicted.

Not entirely true.

That NPRM is also an R&O which denies a whole bunch of proposals made earlier. Many ideas such as free upgrades and new license classes were denied by FCC.

> NPRM 05-143 DOES NOT CONCERN ITSELF with ANY NEW PROPOSALS

It denies many existing ones - particularly some that would create new license classes or eliminate old ones.

In any event, there's no evidence FCC will change the written
requirements,
number of license classes, the license class names or the associated privileges,
any time soon.

You are mistaken, Len. For example, I'm opposed to the "regulation by bandwidth" proposal as written. I also opposed - twice - the ARRL's proposals for free (no test) upgrades in license class.

Guess whose comments were cited by FCC in denying those free upgrades?

I think it's very likely that Element 1 will simply be eliminated.
There may be some Petitions for Reconsideration, but those will be denied. End of
story.

Probably. But you won't be satisfied with that, despite your frequent claims of only wanting to eliminate the Morse Code test.

You're simply mistaken about that, Len.

For example, I think the ARRL made a big mistake not letting WK3C run for Director of the Atlantic Division. That's my division, btw...

The change of zoning near your house did not remove any privileges from you, did it, Len? It didn't make your taxes go up or require you to change
your house in any way, right?

Yet you opposed it and kept trying to keep the 1960s zoning rules

You've got it all bass-ackwards, Jim. My "experiment" presumes that you won't find Advanced in the Extra portion of the band, and you won't find Generals in either the Advanced or Extra segments. Thus, if incentive licensing is working, there ought to be a noticeable difference in operator/technical skills evident between the opposite ends of the band segments.

As you so ably point out, that difference doesn't seem to exist. I rest my case. No benefits of incentive licensing are observed in the real world.

Who said I was Roger? wrote:
> My name

Your name is the king of knob jobs in Alabama, 32 year old VIRGIN Lloyd Austin Davies.

Behold he shall ride upon a hard dick and his name shall be Lloyd Austin Davies.

And it came to pass that the king of knob jobs in Alabama, (as Lloyd is known) was gone for a long time, and some of the people celebrated and some speculated that he had died, some speculated that he was ill, some speculated that he was in Maryland at Ray Chason's apartment, and some even thought that the king of knob jobs in Alabama had been made a sex slave by Ray Chason and his butt buddies. It was then the people started to rejoice.

And when the niggers and crackheads heard the murmuring and rumours of the people they assured them that the king of knob jobs in Alabama was just busy sucking on one of his nigger neighbors' big black dicks and would address the people as soon as he could swallow that big load of nigger jizz. The neighbors in his hud apartment complex also knew that the project was the sucking of nigger dicks and telling lies and more lies, but they did not tell the people this for they did not desire to have a vice squad nightmare in the city of Deliverance Extras. Alabama liked to hear about the fat retarded one who proclaimed he was the king of knob jobs in Alabama.

And the niggers and crackheads reassured the people that everything was all right, and told them to prepare pyres and to cook meat, and to ice down beer and nehi soda, and to go out and buy potato chips and other unhealthy snacks from the traders who had immigrated to the kingdom from Vietnam and the land of Gaza. And so the went down to these little stores owned and bought these things. And they went home and warmed up their TV's, for the sabbath approached and the sabbath would bring more action from the mediocre football team at U of Alabama, and the sabbath would bring plenty of exciting nob gobbling action and goo gobbling from the king of knob jobs in Alabama.

The king of knob jobs in Alabama in reality is a ghastly pale porker who stands only 5'6" and weighs an unhealthy 290 Lbs. His skin is as white as copying paper due to his night job of delivering pizzas to the ghetto neighborhood where he dwells in a filthy, roach infested HUD hovel. He doesn't venture outside during the daylight hours, instead preferring to play with Star Trek and Dalek dolls, post lies and filth on the internet and jack off to thoughts of his unrequited love interest Roger Wiseman and dream of finally actually getting some pussy. Not stick pussy, which his homosexual lover Steve Holsten feeds him several times a year when Lloyd goes for his visits, usually around Thanksgiving.

Lately, the king of knob jobs in Alabama has been consumed with posting pictures of someone he says is Roger Wiseman. In fact, the obviously botched purple rendering of somebody else has been cut and pasted, photoshopped and distributed all over the internet by the king of knob jobs in Alabama and his homosexual fantasy lover Ray Chason who is the king of knob jobs in Maryland. Chason who is also a porker has set up a blog of Roger's ex-wife "Regina" telling even more lies. Roger wasn't ever married to anyone named Regina. Of course Chason and Lloyd refuse to let truth get in the way of their lies, like their butt buddy friends who post lies, lies and more lies about anybody who reveals the truth about this band of homosexual predators.

Read everything closely. There were three letters sent.

The letters to both Wiseman and Tunder were a preemptive "warning" that did not allege any activities. That hardly qualifies as a warning in the context of someone having actually done something.

The letter with the warning in it ALLEGED interference, and warned of consequences.

The retest letter made no reference to interference; in fact gave no reason for requiring the retest. Such a request is part of the Volunteer Examining program. It could have been made for any number of reasons that may have had nothing to do with any of the addressee's actions. An investigation into the VE group that gave the test, would be a good example.

Only one letter was a warning referring to interference.

So, yes; if you are going to tell it, tell it straight.

sure are, they become iretrivable the length f time varies and is

I know and you should as well that real child abuse goes on all the time under their very noses.

I know that SS will laugh at such a claim as you describe, talked about it with a friend of mine who works there.

Indeed enough these bullshit complaints can alas hide real reports by cuasing them to be discounted as just aother crack pot, as well by wasting their time investgation the "charges" of crackpots like yourself.

yes it is bullshit

but as I said before the FCC is pretty screwed up in many ways but at least they know they can't take part in hate filled gay bashing

therefore any claim that someone could get the FCC to any action against me for being Bisexual is pure bullshit

Well, you did imply that the reason the "Italians and Englishmen" were "yelling at Arabs in Australia" was "for not being from there" and not for anything more serious, like church burning and firing into children's choirs.

A MATTER OF FACT WHEN I LOG IN TO GEOCITIES THEY SAY THE PAGE DOESN'T

STEVE ANIMATION CHILD PORN IS LEGAL, THE PERSON WHO WROTE THAT ARTICLE WROTE IT INCORRECTLY. PAINTING, CARTOONS, SCULPTURE, AND DRAWING ARE EXEMPTED FROM THE LAW. THE PERSON WHO WROTE THAT ARTICLE SAID THE OPPOSITE OF WHAT THE LAW STATES. WHICH SHOW YOU NOT TO BELEIVE EVERYTHING YOU READ ON THE INTERNET. THE MAN THAT WAS ARRESTED HAD ANIMATION PORN, BUT HE ALSO HAD A HUGH COLLECTION OF REAL CHILD PORN WHICH WAS A VIOLATION OF HIS PROBATION. THE MAN HAD BE ARRESTED BEFORE FOR HAVING REAL CHILD PORN AN SPENT TIME IN PRISON, HE WAS RELEASE AND WAS PUT ON PROBATION AND HE DOWNLOAD THIS MATERIAL AT WORK AND WAS CAUGHT AND REALLY WAS FOUND GULITY OF VIOLATING HIS PROBATION. ME, I DON'T MESS WITH REAL CHILD PORN, NEVER HAVE, I'M INTO JAPANESE ANIMATION AND HENTAI.

YOU AIN'T DOING SHIT ABOUT IT STEVE, EXCEPT GET ON HERE AND CRY LIKE A LITTLE BITCH. YOU CAN'T DO NOTHING ABOUT IT BECAUSE IT'S LEGAL, VIRTUAL PORN WAS DEEMED PROTECTED BY THE FIRST AMENDMENT BY THE US SUPREME COURT IN 2001. THE PURPOSE OF CHILD PORN LAWS IS TO PROTECT CHILD IN MAKING OF IT, SINCE VIRTUAL PORN IS FROM SOMEONE'S IMAGINATION THERE IS NO VICTIM, THUS NO CRIME (ACCORDING TO THE US SUPREME COURT) EVEN IN FEBER VS NEW YORK IN THE 70'S THE SUPREME COURT RULED THAT SOME CHILD PORNOGRAPHY WAS LEGAL, IT'S THE PROCESS OF MAKING IT THAT MAKES IT ILLEGAL.

Tsk, tsk, tsk. As the self-appointed Chef of Navel Operations your oven was set on too-high and you burned all the tool house cookies.

I haven't "posted a thing in here" for the simple reason this newsgroup does NOT accept binaries. [look it up] Neither can you "charge me with a UCMJ violation" since that UCMJ hasn't applied to me since 1960.

However, I have, and Frank Gilliland has, posted considerable material ELSEWHERE (free downloading) which is prima facie evidence that WE indeed did serve...at the times we gave and doing the things we have said we did. Here is mine again:

http://sujan.hallikainen.org/RadioBroadcasting/uploads/My3Years.pdf

Frank has already posted links to his uploads. The Pacific Stars and Stripes military newspaper has its own website.

No stories about "SUQ"-ing anything or high-speed morse nor of saving the fleet in the Persian Gulf nor of being "hotshits" with a code key. Just quiet massive military communications, over three dozen high-power HF transmitters, doing the Army Signal Corps' job of "getting the message through" 24/7. A part of the military that wasn't glamorous, didn't wear flashy or cute uniforms, and bore the brunt of national defense as it always has since 1776...with the casualty rates the highest of any branch, from battlefields of Pennsylvania to the Persian Gulf area of Dubya's rule.

Has Dudly the Imposter (aka "K4YZ") EVER posted ANYTHING
ANYHWERE about his glorious heroic 18 years of USMC "service" in "seven hostile actions?" NO. A resounding NO!

Yet, you want to blabber on with nit-picky forms procedure on "not having a DD-214 anywhere." Tsk, just how much do you demand of all others? Besides "hotshot morse op" stories that is? Sorry, I don't have any such stories...never used any morse code at anytime in the last 52 years...haven't been required to.

But...it is "perfectly okay" to let Dudly the Imposter go on and on. Never mind that he shames the entire U.S. military establishment. Never mind that he doesn't speak well for the "highest class" of United States amateur radio. He's an extra and he's okay...

Later on you will contradict yourself, but that is par for your course.

I obtained a COMMERCIAL radio operator license 49 years ago.
First Class, one test, no repeats necessary.

WHY was it "required" that I obtain an amateur license?

I'm just wanting the morse code test for an amateur radio license eliminated.

Why are YOU "spending so much time and energy" trying to deletion?

What are you afraid of? Loss of your personal status,

The amateur radio service does not require its licensees to wage war and kill the enemy.

The military "field days" were not little outings in a park once a year.

Amateur radio doesn't operate in an environment of high explosive ordinance going off nearby.

>And why all the comparisons? You seem to feel a need to prove that you

Yes, sweetums, I - and every other military person - had it TOUGHER than you civilians safe at home.

Yes there is. License test regulations REQUIRE a code test for any class having below-30-MHz operation privileges...BUT...the FCC does not mandate all amateur USING morse code modes over and above any other mode. All are optional.

>> NPRM 05-143 is SOLELY regarding the elimination of the code test

>Not entirely true.

ENTIRELY TRUE.

>That NPRM is also an R&O which denies a whole bunch of proposals >made earlier. Many ideas such as free upgrades and new license >classes were denied by FCC.

Are you totally without comprehension...or just partly?

NPRM = Notice of PROPOSED Rule Making.

An NPRM is simply a statement of what the FCC proposes to do.

A Memorandum Report and Order ("R&O") is the later ORDER which establishes changes in regulations.

Since you are devoid of comprehension of the flow of documents from the FCC, let me put down the order of things as they happened:

1. WRC-03 action resulted in a revision of S25, the Radio Regulations defining amateur radio. End of July 2003.

2. A total of 18 Petitions were sent to, and displayed to the public by the FCC regarding revision to amateur radio regulation changes as a result of WRC-03 actions.
Petitions shown to the public in two major groups
2003 to 2004 along with all Comments.

3. As a result of review of the Petitions and commentary by the public on those Petitions, the FCC issued a Notice of PROPOSED Rule Making...along with the reasons the Commission had in deciding on what to put in that PROPOSED Rule Makng. Released 15 July 2005. The end of all Comments was 14 November 2005.

4. As of the latest Federal Register issue of Thursday,
December 15, 2005, there has been NO Memorandum
Report and Order released by the FCC concerning NPRM 05-143.

>It denies many existing ones - particularly some that would create new >license classes or eliminate old ones.

The Commission explained, in detail, WHY it reached its own conclusions on what to put in the Notice of PROPOSED Rule Making. Those conclusions were as a result of the 18 Petitions which had been presented to the public with the public invited to comment on all 18 in the 2003-2004 time period.

NPRM 05-143 does not, nor has any such Notice of PROPOSED Rule Making ever done, establish any sort of ORDER to change regulations. When such an ORDER is released, it may be the same, may be different from the NPRM. That is up to the FCC to decide. The FCC has the legal right to make the final decisions on a Memorandum Report and ORDER.

>In any event, there's no evidence FCC will change the written requirements, >number of license classes, the license class names or the associated >privileges, any time soon.

Irrelevant. NPRM 05-143 concerns itself solely with the deletion of test element 1.

Tsk, bad spin on your part. The ARRL has remained an equivalent of "City Hall" politics in the past...since the creation of the FCC in 1934 and up until the beginning of the 1990s. It has been clearly evident to disinterested parties in all that time when the league got what the league wanted.

>Did you read Footnote 142, Len?

Tsk, tsk, tsk, you don't like footnotes, Jimmie. You've said so in the past.

>> No to all the above. FCC just doesn't think that amateur radio >> deserves their maximum-mission attention in their Congress-law-
>> mandated task of regulating ALL United States civil radio.
>How do you know, Len? You're not FCC.

It is very easy to see by any disinterested observer, Jimmie.

Go to the FCC website, go to the Wireless Telecommunications Bureau page, then through that go to the Amateur Radio page.
What is the latest date on important documents there? 2002.

There's not been ANY important issues put forth on that page in three years. Not the S25 revisions at WRC-03, not the 18 Petitions, not the release of NPRM 05-143.

Now check around the OTHER radio services' issues, documents and so forth and count them up anywhichwayyouwant. Far, far MORE matters discussed by both the Commission and the Public on those OTHER matters than amateur radio issues.

>> When the Commission does get around to regulating amateur radio,
>> it does so in Memorandum Reports and Orders which are extremely >> detailed and explicit (and sometimes lengthy) to their task of >> regulating all U.S. civil radio.
>Then why the NPRM?

The Notice of PROPOSED Rule Making was in response to the public's call for PETITIONS to change the amateur radio regulations after the S25 Radio Regulations revisions at WRC-03.

NO Notice of Proposed Rule Making is ever a Memorandum Report
and Order. NPRMs do not change regulations. R&Os do.

Do you have to be led by the hand through this non-maze of procedure or are you just being obstinate?

No, you've continually barfed up League-speak in here as a >apply to anything NOW....

Tsk, tsk, tsk, that's an entirely different "discussion" concerning overt LYING of military service by Dudly the Imposter (aka "K4YZ").

I brought up a VALID example some years ago on why the majority of military communications worldwide was NOT done by morse code mode since 1948...for the reason being that I was assigned at a major Army communications station serving

a theater command Hq and stayed there for three years.

YOU have NEVER done anything approaching that. In fact, YOU have NEVER served in any military service of the USA.

Naturally you would be upset about anyone else doing something big and important in HF communications. TS.

>For example, I think the ARRL made a big mistake not letting WK3C run for Poor baby, can't get things straight on Commission procedure?

Jimmie, 98-143 was settled, made devoid by Memorandum Report and Order 99-412 released in late December 1999. 98-143 is OLD HISTORY. Defunct. Available only for archival study and not applicable to NPRM 05-143.

>The change of zoning near your house did not remove any privileges from

Irrelevant to RADIO REGULATIONS. Local zoning laws have NOTHING to do with federal radio regulations. Give it up.

One military veteran can tell another military veteran lots of things. Brakob, Burke, and myself are all military veterans. YOU have NEVER been an military veteran.

Here's a quaint old military phrase given in the tradition and sincerity of the military service: "Go fuck yourself!"

That will take care of Saturday night for you...

I don't follow the day to day chaos. Just happened to catch a few

I'd be careful about believing fantastic anecdotes until the smoke

Why would you expect a higher quality of language behavior? All amateurs are required to know and adhere to the same rules regardless of license. Language behavior is covered on the Technician test.

People with a talent for code will tend to be better than the typical operator regardless of license. Some people, like myself, may choke during a CW ragchew regardless of our CW skill or license level. People who regularly DX will be able to finesse their way into getting the DX station at low power and people who do not regularly DX will have a much rougher time, again regardless of class.

What everyone overlooks is that the test is merely the basic required book knowledge expected for each level. Experience is not tested for. The person who goes straight to Extra will have no more experience and no more operating skills than anyone else. However, he/she starts with more book knowledge as a platform to build on. But anyone can choose to gain the same knowledge. They do not have to wait until they are studying for a new license.

Plus every amateur is free to pursue improving their skills. The license is a starting point not a stopping point.

Actually the place that I see the difference in operating skills is on the VHF bands in the VHF contests. When I review my contacts in those contests, the large majority of them are Extra class operators. They seem to be the ones to have the skill necessary to put together and operate a station suitable to make long distance VHF contacts and the skill to do so.

QRS = slow down
QRQ = speed up

example:

PSE QRS 15 = please slow down to 15wpm
PSE QRS 30 = please speed up to 30wpm

If you don't attach a number, you are leaving it up to their judgement what speed to change to. This often works but as you can see from Hans' story, it can get you in over your head.

No, just the opposite, Hans.

And you usually won't!

But you will find Extras in the Advanced and General parts of the band, and Advanceds in the General part of the band.

>Thus, if incentive licensing is working, > there ought to be a noticeable difference in operator/technical skills evident > between the opposite ends of the band segments.

That difference, if it exists, would be diluted by the Extras in the Advanced and General sections, and the Advanceds in the General section. Muddies the waters, as it were.

There's also the effect of the bandplans. The lower parts of the subbands are often where the DX and DXers hang out, so you hear more pileups and less discussion. Many of the "watering holes" for various interests and modes are intentionally placed in the General sections: AM is near 3885,
PSK31 is around 3579, QRP is around 3540, etc.

> As you so ably point out, that difference doesn't seem to exist.

It's interesting that you suggest the experiment on 'phone, not CW ;-)

> I rest my > case. No benefits of incentive licensing are observed in the real world.

There are other experiments to try. For example, look in the amateur radio publications - particularly the most technical-and operating-skill-emphasis ones like QEX and NCJ - and see what license classes the authors of the best articles hold.

A good one!

But lemme tellya what I recall from the late 1960s....

I remember the howling and cussing over the coming of the then-new regs. I was surprised that so many hams that were older and more experienced than I were so upset about having to take more exams.

You'd have thought that the Advanced and Extra writtens were EE courses, and that the 20 wpm Morse Code exams were world-class. Or something.

But after a bit of listening and questioning, the situation became clear. Most of those complaining had been licensed after the Great Giveaway of Christmas 1952, and had little or no knowledge of how things were before Generals and Conditionals got all privileges.

Many of those who complained the loudest had started out as Novices, studied and practiced like mad during their Novice year, and then upgraded to General or Conditional.
Once they'd gotten to the General/Conditional level, they basically sat back and considered themselves "fully qualified", and relaxed.

What really ticked them off was that FCC was saying there was more to learn!

It didn't help their addytood when young squirts like me started showing up with Advanceds and Extras....back when Extras made up less than 2% of US hams....

What was even funnier was when some of the worst complainers and moaners started working towards the Advanced and Extra and found they could pass those exams. They discovered that 20 wasn't all that fast if you actually used Morse Code on the air for a while, and that knowing the technical stuff in the books well enough to pass the exams didn't take an EE degree.

Soon there were Advanceds and Extras all over the place and it was no big deal.

Now the circle is complete...

At one time I noted that most of the violations were awarded to the higher class licensees. I don't know if that was an artifact of the FCC picking on them because they should know better, or if it had to do with the kind of attitudes of so many of the Extra's display on RRAP carrying over the the bands.

So the FCC shouldn't bother listening to the bands either since they can't tell if a transmitter is having a problem or not. (wink!)

Of course, Len. You've told us that ancient-history story many times.

But as I stated before: The path under discussion is the path to an amateur radio license. You have not taken the first step on the path to an amateur radio license, Len.

That's a fact.

And I don't think you ever will.

> WHY was it "required" that I obtain an amateur license?

WHO ever said it was required, Len? Not me. It's not required at all.

However, it seems very strange that you're so worked up over requirements for a license you don't seem to have any intention of ever getting (except for that Extra out of the box" outburst) and haven't taken the first step to get.

Remember those meetings before your local zoning commission about the proposed change from R to R1?

Suppose an outsider who neither lived in the community, owned property there, nor planned to move there, showed up at the meetings.

Suppose this nonresident uninvolved outsider spoke at great length about how the zoning should be changed to R1.

Wouldn't you want to know why that person was so interested, wouldn't you?

Typo alert! Gee, you found another one of my typos, Len!

Thanks!

It should read:

"Nobody says you have to get an amateur radio license."

> Ah, but YOU already said I had some kind of moral imperative > to get an amateur radio license.

Where did I say that, Len? Show us, if you can. Otherwise you're just making stuff up.

You sure are, sometimes!

> "Not going to get?" Who said that...besides YOU?

Len, if you were going to get an amateur radio license,
you would have done so years ago.

But you didn't get one when the medical waivers were created in 1990.

You didn't get one when the Tech lost its code test in 1991.

Nor did you get one when the code and written testing for all license classes was drastically reduced in 2000.

It's pretty clear that you're not going to get an amateur radio license. So your interest must be in something else.

> I'm just wanting the morse code test for an amateur radio > license eliminated.

That and a lot more. Such as age limits and more written-test reductions. Plus you'd like to do away with ARRL, subbands, bandplans, and a whole lot more.

> Why are YOU "spending so much time and energy" trying to > throw shit on all of those desiring that test element 1
> deletion?

I'm not throwing anything on anyone, Len.

I'm just shedding a little light on the subject.

Seems to tick you off no end to have to face opposition to your ideas, though.

> What are you afraid of? Loss of your personal status,

I'm not "afraid of" any of that, Len. Besides, if the standards are lowered, my "status" may actually rise, not fall.

That's true. But you were talking about the radio operating environment,
weren't you? Those ADA facilities looked pretty civilized to me.

Did they have "field day" at ADA?

How much of that went on at ADA, Len? I didn't see any pictures of that sort of thing.

Well, you've just confirmed what I thought, Len. It's all about you.

> Yes, sweetums, I - and every other military person - had it > TOUGHER than you civilians safe at home.

Maybe you did. Certainly a lot of military personnel did. No denying that.

But you seem to deny that any civilians face any danger.

Police - firefighters - emergency medical personnel - they're all civilians, yet they face danger all the time. Look how many NYC police and firefighters lost their lives in the line of duty on September 11, 2001 - how safe were they, Len?

One image from that terrible day that I will always recall is the streams of people heading out of and away from the burning towers - while the police, firefighters and EMTs were running towards them....

Where do I insist on that, Len? Show us, if you can.

You're the one who cannot tolerate difference of opinion, and hurl insults at those who disagree or prove you wrong.

So what? You've banged that drum many times, Len, but you don't explain why it should matter.

There's no requirement that amateurs use any particular mode, or technology, or frequency band, or power level, or antenna - yet the tests cover a wide range of subjects.

Some say "why should I learn Morse Code if I don't intend to use it?" And that's a fair question.

The answer is "why should I learn anything I don't intend to use?"

For example, if someone wants to operate 75 meter AM with hollow state equipment, why do they have to learn all that VHF/UHF stuff, and solid-state stuff, digital stuff, beam antennas, etc.?

What spin? It's the truth, Len. Anybody can propose things to FCC, and many have.

For example:

The ARRL filed the first "incentive licensing" proposal in 1963.
Over the next year or so there were at least 10 more proposals, all from non-ARRL sources, that all got RM numbers.

That was long before the internet, ECFS, etc.

So much for your anti-League spin...

What's the problem if the ARRL sometimes succeeds in their proposals? Some ARRL proposals are pretty good.

Did you know that way back in 1951 the ARRL opposed the creation of the Amateur Extra license?

So much for your anti-ARRL spin...

Here, I'll repeat it for you:

I think it's very likely that Element 1 will simply be eliminated.

I've thought that for a long time.

I sure as heck don't want to be you, Len!

But I have all the qualifications needed to judge what you will do.

No judgement is really needed, though. You've already started on other areas besides getting rid of the Morse Code test. Age requirements,
elimination of license classes, more reductions in the written tests, elimination of subbands and bandplans.

Anyone who reads your voluminous postings knows what you're up to, Len.

No, you've mentioned it many times in many contexts. As if it somehow mattered.

And what's all this "imposter" nonsense anyway? You claim to know who did and did not serve in the US military, so it should be easy to find out
who is and is not a veteran of the United States Marine Corps - right?

Something about databases?

You keep demanding DD-214s. If K4YZ sent you his DD-214 electronically, would you admit that you were wrong and that he is, indeed, a veteran?

Or would you carry on as you usually do?

I think the latter.

> I brought up a VALID example some years ago on why the > majority of military communications worldwide was NOT done
> by morse code mode since 1948

Why is that valid to "amateur" radio??

>...for the reason being that I > was assigned at a major Army communications station serving
> a theater command Hq and stayed there for three years.

One station. One country's army. Yet you try to make it sound like the whole world.

Besides, it's a ncient history.

Most of all, you contradict yourself. Amateur radio isn't the military.
So
what the military did all those years ago doesn't have much relevance to amateur radio testing today.

> YOU have NEVER done anything approaching that.

How do you know, Len? You don't know what I have done. There's a lot I have done in my life that I don't write about here.

And what does it matter?

Suppose someone who had been in the military, and had done all sorts of radio communication for the military and government service, were to show up here and say that the Morse Code test should be retained for an Amateur Radio license.

Would you admit you were wrong and defer to that person's opinion?

Or would you abuse them the way you abuse everyone who disagrees with you?

I think the latter.

In fact I know it would be the latter - because it's already happened.

So it doesn't matter what my experience or service or education is.
All that matters to you is that I disagree with you - and you behave like a three-year-old.

It's a valid analogy. That's why you want me to give it up!

Explain to us why it's OK for you to try to keep the neighborhood where you live unchanged and tied to the standards of 1960, but it's not OK for radio amateurs to try to keep the Morse Code test?

Explain to us why you demand that others accept 'progress' and
'change',
and 'keep up with the times', but yet you insist that your neighborhood
must not change, and the owners of an adjacent property must conform to your idea of what they can do with their land.

Know what's really ironic? The end result was that they built houses
that are now worth more than yours!

> >Or someone who tells a US Navy veteran to shove something up his I/O

Sure they can. Doesn't mean they should. I can say all kinds of nasty things like that to you - but I don't. Neither does Hans.

Do you think anyone is impressed by your outbursts like that?

Do you think it makes anyone respect you, or agree with you, or think you're a better person?

> Brakob, Burke, and myself are all military

So are many others - K8MN, W4NTI, K4YZ, K2UNK, to name just a few.

Ah yes, a classic Anderson hissy-fit.

Len, do you think anyone is impressed by your outbursts like that one?

Do you think it makes anyone respect you, or agree with you, or think you're a better person?

It doesn't.

What it does is to make you look like an out-of-control three-year-old who's badly in need of a time-out.

Fun fact: The $42,000 fines for ex-KG6IRO have been upheld. When you read what the guy did, it's pretty awful.

Guess what class of license he held. And how old he is.

Gosh...I thought it was a GRANT from the Commission to transmit RF energy on the ham frequencies. Sort of like a hunting or fishing license allows one to hunt or fish in designated areas.

Aren't "radiosport" contests all about hunting for contact areas and fishing fishing for radio contacts? :-)

Wow! Someone should have TOLD the U.S. Army Signal Corps folks at Evans Signal Laboratory in 1946 when they were the first to bounce a radio signal off the moon!

Yeah, they should have told the Signal Corps "how to do it" in Korea in the 1950s when they set out all that VHF radio relay equipment in the hills and valleys there.

Where WAS the ARRL when all that was going on? They didn't tell the Signal Corps much of anything...

Sorry, out of town for a few weeks.

The Astronet guys observed that the flashes were conicident both in time and location on the moon when observed from various locations up and down the west coast. Conclusion was that the flashes were meteor impacts on the lunar surface. I think this was later confirmed independently.

One of the guys had an interesting 80m setup. Separate Tx and Rx, and 1kw amplifier. He had an separate Rx antenna, an IF output jack on the Rx, and an electronic TR switch on the Rx.

He would connect an oscilloscope to the IF output of the Rx, and hit a few dits on the keyer. You could see the transmit waveform as full-screen signal, then nothing as the Rx recovered back into operation after a few tens of microseconds. Then you could see the backscatter pop up on the receiver scope. The keying rate had to be fast enough and completely synchronous to see it on the non-storage scopes of the day. But he was able to measure the time to receive the echos back from the ionosphere and pretty much could predict whether he should bother operating the net that night (with reasonable accuracy). The echos were somewhat smeared out, so the return signal was undergoing a somewhat distributed reflection process.

I don't recall if the backscatter was normally TX->Ionosphere->Rx or if it was Tx->Ionosphere->Ground->Ionsphere->Rx
My recollection is that he had seen both cases.

Works for me. Looks like it was typed with a standard IBM electric daisy-wheel and has a very slight paper misalignment. The scan looks like a third-generation copy -- I'm guessing that the original was xeroxed (or scanned and printed), the info scratched out (probably with a pencil, considering the smooth shading on the first three of your SSN), and then scanned for the pic. Am I close?

It's kinda funny tho, the resolution is so high that your "E-9" kinda looks like "K-9"..... 8-)

Anyway, this is not about you -- it's about Major Dud. Now if you and I can post -our- DD-214's, why can't Dudly? I also see that you made E-9 in about 19-1/2 years. I also see that the right side of the form clearly denotes your time in service, as does mine, as does every DD-214 since Socrates marched barefoot through the snow. So why do you think Dudly didn't know about that? And if Dudly's claim -is- true (which I highly doubt), why do you think he couldn't get promoted beyond GySgt (E-7) in nearly the same amount of time it took -you- to reach E-9?

Major Dud might be a ham, and you might share some similar beliefs and/or opinions, but are those valid reasons to defend his fraudulent military service?

BTW, many Usenet services and ISP's will block the posting of a binary to a non-binary groups, so Len may have a valid reason for believing what he said. However, if he wants he can email me a binary, I'll

Plain and simply INCORRECT superchief.

I've never seen any binaries attached to messages in this newsgroup.

You can send it to me as an attachment to private e-mail if you wish.

However, caution on the contents. If it contains "male nudity"
I will forward it to Jimmie who appreciates that sort of thing.

BTW, don't try any farkling about "binaries" being the 10-bit code used in USASCII. "Binary files" in Usenetspeak refer to IMAGE files or executable files.

The most bestest wonderfulest good luck on this now...

Absolutely. U.S. Amateur Extras have to hang together.

Especially if they are morsemen...and hate NCTAs.

It must be an unwritten law or something wherein extras will only slap the wrists of other extras who get out of hand.

For all the flag-waving and patriotic bunting installation done by Hans, he has been most gentle on that fraudulent Dudly the Imposter, the hero of "seven hostile actions."
All he has done lately is argue about the names of COMSEC systems with Dudly.

Doesn't Hans realize that Dud is NOT showing a good face of U.S. amateur radio to the public?

Thanks for the offer, Frank. If needs be I will take you up on that. But I don't see the need of that.

If Hans wants to make like he is CNO berating his swabbies about DD-214s, that still doesn't change the fact that I've not only served Honorably but have several papers up on the subject of radio communications on another website plus an interview that was published in the Pacific Stars and Stripes.

Major Dud hasn't published ONE thing about his active USMC life, no forms, no documents, not even a snapshot. All he has published now is the famous Booger shot of him in a poopy suit at QRZ, in the "uniform" of the CIVIL Air Patrol.

"being different from him".

Actually, Mark, you are the fellow who is lazy. You make no effort to see that your posts are grammatically correct or spelled correctly. Those things combine to make you appear less intelligent than you might be. Your posts are difficult for all to read.

> makes a guy wonder why he went into the ARS at all I thought the one of

No one is required to make contact with you or to even pretend to desire contact with you. Take our local sociopath for example. The only people in this area who make contact with Roger Wiseman aren't aware of who or what he is. The guy is a pariah.

What "fraudulent Dudly the Imposter", Len? What factoids have you coughed up about Steve's military service? All you've done is wail and gnash. You've done a lot of flailing but have offered up precisely zip.

It's just a plain, simple question.

No. The question is whether someone can serve our country in ways other than military service.

Except he didn't invent it and never claimed to. You can find descriptions of his method at least as far back as Thomas Edison, who describes it in his writing about how to learn the code (Edison was a telegrapher).

Farnsworth just popularized it and his name stuck. He was blind, btw.

No, that's not how it happened at all.

W1AW code practice was using the Farnsworth method at least back to 1965, and probably even earlier. The 5, 7-1/2 and 10 wpm code practice runs then and now were/are sent with Farnsworth spacing. >

Your posts that included binaries never showed up on Google. That's just one example of a filtered Usenet service like I was talking about. Irrelevant now, since I have reposted your .jpg as a link.

Dave, you missed his post where he plainly stated that this news group and the people in it aren't worth the time and effort to make his posts readable. He also stated that it is the responsibility of the reader to make sense of material not the responsibility of the author to make it understandable. That's despite the fact that every communications course teaches exactly the opposite.

A number of potential recruits are in great danger of being misled into thinking that they are Radio Hams when, in fact, they are nothing of the kind! As it is the season of goodwill, let us show our goodwill by saving these poor deluded fools from the mischievous ne-er-do-wells who will attempt to mislead them. (Radio Hams are technically-motivated people and not merely turnip-brained button pushers like CBers and like M3/CBers)

What is Ham Radio?

Ham Radio is a technical pursuit for those who are interested in the science of radio wave propagation and who are also interested in the way that their radios function. It has a long-standing tradition of providing a source of engineers who are born naturals.

Ham Radio awakens in its aficionados a whole-life fascination with all things technical and gives an all-abiding curiosity to improve one's scientific knowledge. It's a great swimming pool, please dive in!

This excitement causes a wish to share the experience with ones fellow man, and shows itself in the gentlemanly traditions of Ham Radio.

Radio Hams are in a unique privileged position in that they can construct and operate their own equipment! No-one else has this privilege. Users, such as broadcasters, the po lice and armed farces, CBers and mobile phone users have to purchase ready-made gear. Manufacturers are not licensed to operate their gear. Radio Hams are qualified to design, build and then operate their own pieces of equipment. They do this with gusto, and also repair and modify their own equipment. This is a privilege well worth the effort to gain, and one to be jealously guarded.

The excitement that drives a Radio Ham starts with relatively simple technologies at first, perhaps making his own Wimshurst machine and primary cells. Small pieces of test equipment follow, possibly multimeters and signal generators. Then comes receivers and transmitters. It is with the latter that communication with like-minded technically motivated people takes off. The scope for technical development grows with the years

and now encompasses DSP and DDS. There is also a great deal of excitement in the areas of computer programming to
be learnt and applied.

The technical excitement motivates Radio Hams to compete with each other to determine who has designed and manufactured
the best-quality station. This competitiveness is found in DXing, competitions and fox-hunts.

-----OOOOO----

However, beware! A Ham Radio licence is such a desirable thing to have that there are large numbers of people who wish to be thought of
as Radio Hams when, in fact, they are nothing of the kind! Usually such people are a variation of the CB Radio hobbyist; they buy their radios off the shelf and send them back to be repaired; they are not interested in technical discussion
and sneer at those who are; they have no idea how their radios work inside and have no wish to find out;
they are free with rather silly personal insults;
they have not satisfied any technical qualification
and their licences prevent the use of self-designed-and-built equipment.

These CB types engage in the competitive activities
with their Cheque-Book-purchased off-the-shelf radios
in a forlorn effort to prove that they are Radio Hams.

No _REAL_ Radio Hams are deceived by such people!

-----ooooo-----

One infallible way to disambiguate the CB Radio Hobbyist
from the _REAL_ Radio Ham is to solicit their view of the difference between CB Radio and Ham Radio. A Radio Ham will perceive Ham Radio to be a technical pursuit and will perceive CB Radio to be a social communications facility
no different in essence to a land-line telephone or a GSM mobile in the hands of a 6-year-old. Thus a Radio Ham could also hold a CB licence safe in the knowledge that such a licence says no more about him than having a land-line telephone, whilst continuing to regard Ham Radio as a separate technical pursuit.

A CB Radio hobbyist, on the other hand, sees no difference between a Ham Radio licence and a CB Radio licence. To him, they are sisters-under-the-skin. Wrongly, the CB Radio Hobbyist then tries to classify himself as the equal of the Radio Ham when, in fact, he is nothing of the kind. A sure sign of a CB Radio hobbyist is if he holds, or has ever held, a licence issued under the gangrenous degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme.

-----ooooo-----

One group of people who claim to be of the standard of Radio Hams but who are in reality nothing more than an apology for the failure of a CBer are those class B licensees who falsely proclaimed that they were against
the use of a Morse Test to control access to the HF
bands, until, that is, a test was introduced at their intellectual level, the intellectual level of 6-year-olds.

6 year-olds simply lack the mathematical tool kit to enable them to handle even the simplest algebraic manipulation
for Ohm's Law and thus, the disgraceful Class Ber's in the aforementioned category are not Radio Hams by any stretch
of the imagination!

Remember - A sure sign of a CB Radio hobbyist is if he holds,
or has ever held, a licence issued under the gangrenous
degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme!

Happy Solstice, and let's keep the religious crap out of Crapmas!

You seem to be intellectually challenged on the point that you make below (CBer, are you?) - the essence of a discussion group is,.....wait for it.....discussion!

Discussion implies talking.

ITYM, "too" and not, "to". (CBer, are you?)

Pierian Spring, aka Gareth Evans G4SDW, was once a member of a church bellringing group. One wonders what happened in the belltower that turned him so....

RRAP has turned into the new 75 Meters of old.
Nothing but name-calling by a bunch of grumpy old men, racist buffoons, cheap bastards and dirty old perverts. It's now just like 75 Meters was before Hollingsworth came on the scene and cleaned everything up. -----> RRAP STINKS !!

.....and I love ever fucking minute of it!
I almost wish I could fill a bathtub with RRAP and jump in naked into it and do un-natural sex acts with sheep therin....!! :) ;)

(whoops! sorry I forgot you're supposed to have sex with sheep out in the barn while you have knee-high rubber boots on. You put the sheep's rear legs inside one of each boot and then go to town..... Ho-Ho-Ho-Ho-Ho !

(wogie told me this technique...and it works!! try it!!)

Okay, got it. Thanks Frank.

I've believed Hans' service in the USN. I've believed yours.
I've believed Brian Burke's service. I've believed Bill Sohl's.
I've lived mine and have documents and hundreds of pictures to prove it. My DD-214 copy is recorded with the County Recorder of Winnebago, Illinois, something I did in 1956 as a resident
there at the time. <shrug>

Unfortunately for all those "who can see their attachments just fine," several ISPs just don't carry attachments on all groups.
That's just the way it is.

We'll just have to wait it out while all the pompous misdirection dies down on AMATEUR RADIO POLICY matters in this morseblog. :-)

In getting back to the nitty-gritty of who lies and who tells the truth, all us readers have yet to see ANYTHING of Dudly
the Imposter's documents, pictures, whatever from his heroic descriptions of being in "seven hostile actions." In case anyone is wondering, Dudly the Imposter (aka "K4YZ") is an amateur extra in the amateur radio service of the USA. We readers haven't seen a thing of Dudly actually operating his amateur radio station. All we get is the famous Booger Shot of him in a CIVIL Air Patrol "uniform" on QRZ.COM.

Now, I'm rather convinced that Dudly wouldn't lie about his CIVIL Air Patrol "rank" but then flying a single engine aircraft doesn't have a helluvalot to do with AMATEUR RADIO.

Neither CAP nor his claimed USMC helicopter maintenance crew "military experience" have anything to do with AMATEUR RADIO.

Jimmie Miccolis (who never served in any military) says that Army RADIO on HF doesn't have anything to do with AMATEUR RADIO on HF...despite the fact that all the physics pertaining to RADIO generation and propagation are exactly the same... despite the fact that high-power vacuum tube HF transmitters of a half century ago generated and operated exactly the same as vacuum tube HF transmitters do today. [that's just the way it is]

Davie Heil (who supposedly served in the USAF and did get into the Department of State of the USA..."he's from the government and is here to help") is of the opinion that one MUST get an amateur radio license before even thinking of posting in this morseblog, let alone getting a (horrors) Commercial radio license.

Lots of "conflicts" going on in here. Meanwhile, the FCC has about 3,803 filings in WT Docket 05-235 to look through and decide what will be the next major step in changed United States amateur radio regulations that will affect NEWCOMERS to amateur radio far more than the already-licensed.

The already-licensed-in-amateur-radio-in-highest-morse-class apparently don't give a <thing> about the future of newcomers as long as they don't upset their personal needs of rank, status, title, and privilege. <shrug>

May the already-licensed-in-amateur-radio-in-highest-morse-class enjoy the lump of coal in their Christmas stockings. They can wear that with pride as they hobble down to the lodge to sip their rum and tell tales of mighty morsemanship derring-do of the old days.

If you publish Childish Broadcasts (CB) such as you do below, then you will be perceived as a CBer.

Ham Radio is a technical pursuit for which it is important to maintain standards. There is no bigotry in seeking to maintain educational standards.

We do ourselves no favours if we associate with the non-technical turnip-brains.

Hey Hans, I deleted the file like you asked in your email. But like I said in my reply (that was blocked by your anti-spamware), what you posted is now public information and is included in more than a few Usenet archives, regardless of whether it's on my site or not.

IOW, if you don't want something made public then don't post it in a public forum..... even Dudly understands -that- much.....!!!

Oh, and in the future, when you email someone, it would be a basic and decent courtesy to put them in your address list so they don't have to deal with some automated crap from your anti-spamware.

K1MAN BULLETIN - 051216A -

W1AW AND K1MAN JOIN FORCES

Dateline - Belgrade Lakes, Maine - 16 December 2005

W1AW/4 came up on 14.275 MHz. yesterday, 15 December 2005, calling CQ for their special event station from the ARRL Christmas toy drive national distribution center in Memphis, Tennessee. K1MAN answered, and Chief Operator Darryl was called to the W1AW mic. The two stations had a short QSO with Darryl explaining the toy drive project in detail. W1AW is the flagship station of ARRL, the American Radio Relay League (www.ARRL.org), and K1MAN is the flagship station of AARA, the American Amateur Radio Association (www.K1MAN.com). K1MAN wished W1AW well and then QSYed to 14.272 MHz. to kick of K1MAN's new live call-in talk show with co-hosts Glenn at K1MAN and Karol at VE7KFM on the "left coast" of Canada (Hi). K1MAN is on the United States "right coast" (Hi). The call in number is 1-800-262-9543.

The kick off "show" was a huge success as the ARRL toy drive 3 KHz up was heavily promoted by both Glenn and Karol. During this "show" on 14.272 MHz., ND8V, enabled by K4ZDH, QRMed W1AW off of 14.275 MHz., an alleged criminal act under the Goldwater Law, Sections 333 and 501 of the 1934 Communications Act. ND8V is under the assumption that the Goldwater Law has been repealed (it has not) since ARRL dropped their listing this law in their FCC Rule Book in the early 1990s, another alleged criminal act itself, under the Goldwater Law, since de-listing of Sections 333 and 501 does give that false impression, doesn't it?. K4ZDH is also in alleged criminal violation of the Goldwater Law, of course, since he has repeatedly failed to discourage interference by hams to the K1MAN Amateur Information Bulletin Service heard on 14.275 MHz. since 1987 and just resumed yesterday after going off the air for IARN (International Amateur Radio Network) emergency traffic reasons on 4 July 2005.

Their is a rampant rumor going around in amateur radio circles that ND8V has requested to share his federal jail cell at Leavenworth with K4ZDH, known to his friends at the Commission at "Rot Riley" Hollingsworth the "K1MAN Killer." According to Glenn Baxter, K1MAN, Executive Director of AARA, there are no provisions in United States law for "vanity jail cells." Dave Sumner, K1ZZ, CEO of ARRL could not be reached for comment on this question and did not return any phone calls almost certainly made from K1TP, W5YI, and other ham radio reporters as this story broke on Thursday.

Glenn Baxter, K1MAN, said in an interview that:

"I certainly support waiving the rules in this case by allowing ND8V and K4ZDH to share jail cells after trial on purely humanitarian grounds. This, after all, is the holiday season, and radio amateurs should all pull together on this one and throw up, errr, throw their support for ND8V's behind, errr, throw their support BEHIND ND8V and K4ZDH." Ed. comment: Lay off the wine Glenn!

Chris Imlay, ARRL counsel, has advised, we believe, K1ZZ to invoke the Fifth Amendment since ARRL might also be criminally prosecuted in this case. Former Assistant U.S. Attorney Gail Fisk Malone is rumored to be considering a return to the Justice Department to personally handle this very high profile case. Gail, no doubt, has her eye on Hillery Clinton and the White House. Malone has neither confirmed nor denied that she is a presidential candidate nor that her running mate will be Wayne Green, W2NSD, who ran for Vice President at least once before. Wayne indicated to this reporter recently that he wants to reform education in the U.S., and, as Vice President, he would most certainly have his best chance to do this, in this reporter's opinion.

Glenn Baxter, K1MAN, has stated, again, that he IS NOT a candidate for President and that there WILL NOT be K1MAN Amateur Information Bulletins coming from the White House if he is:

"I am getting too old for politics, and my responsibilities at AARA and K1MAN are far to great at this time to even consider the White House. With Hollingsworth in jail, there would be no point. One FCC Commissioner will be as good as any other once we have put Rot Riley away," Mr. Baxter said.

Later in the day, W1AW and K1MAN re-established contact on 14.275 MHz. and were driven off the frequency by ND8V. Mr. Baxter stated:

"ND8V also drove me off of 14.275 MHz. while I was working G7BGY and 4Z4UN on December 14, 2005. There seems to be a pattern here. K3VR even E-mailed me yesterday that he has sent CD recordings of K1MAN to all FCC Commissioners. For the full text of little Brian's juvenile E-Mail see www.K1MAN.com, also attached below."

Today, in Washington, D.C., several FCC Commissioners were spotted walking around listening to Brian's MP3 recordings of K1MAN on their I-PODs, according to sources of questionable reliability, since all of the FCC is out on Christmas vacation and in Maine skiing with their kids now home from college.

"It is great that W1AW and K1MAN are working together now," Mr. Baxter said. "Tune in to the K1MAN live call-in talk show on 14.275 MHz.

plus or minus QRM, of course! Give us a call, even if it is only for a signal report or QSL request. Call 1-800-262-9543. The first show begins daily at about 11 A.M. EST, and the second program begins at about 2 P.M. EST. Join the fun!" 73 and GL de K1MAN

Little Toad, you'd better have all your books in order at your little "food service business", you know what happened to Al Capone after the state and Feds found out he hadn't been paying the right amount of taxes. But you'd like being a black Bubba's little bitch up in Joilet, wouldn't you?

These are the numbers of current, unexpired
amateur radio licenses held by individuals on the stated dates, and the percentage of the total number of active licenses that class contains:

As of May 14, 2000:

Novice - 49,329 (7.3%)
Technician - 205,394 (30.4%)
Technician Plus - 128,860 (19.1%)
General - 112,677 (16.7%)
Advanced - 99,782 (14.8%)
Extra - 78,750 (11.7%)

Total Tech/TechPlus - 334,254 (49.5%)

Total General/Advanced/Extra - 291,209 (43.2%)

Total all classes - 674,792

As of December 15, 2005:

Novice - 26,727 (4.0%) [decrease of 22,602]
Technician - 274,332 (41.5%) [increase of 68,938]
Technician Plus - 44,127 (6.7%) [decrease of 84,733]
General - 134,908 (20.4%) [increase of 22,231]
Advanced - 74,191 (11.2%) [decrease of 25,591]
Extra - 107,345 (16.2%) [increase of 28,595]

Total Tech/TechPlus - 318,459 (48.1%) [decrease of 15,795]

Total General/Advanced/Extra - 316,444 (47.8%) [increase of 25,235]

Total all classes - 661,630 (decrease of 13,162)

Note that these totals do not include licenses
that have expired but are in the grace period.
They also do not include club, military, RACES
or other station-only licenses.

Note also that effective April 15, 2000, new Novice, Technician Plus and Advanced licenses are no longer issued.

Since April 15, 2000, FCC has renewed all existing Technician Plus licenses as Technician. It is therefore informative to consider the totals of the two classes, since the Technician class includes a significant number of Technician Plus licenses renewed as Technician.

Yes morse is obsolete, but also useful.
The former is no basis for banning it.
The latter is no basis for using it as a passport to the HF Bands.

Why do we need a further exam for incentive licensing? Do we not have enough already?....
(1) CB licence as an appetite whetter
(2) Novice licence
(3) RAE.

(Perversely, the Novice RAE is a higher technical challenge than the RAE!)

Restore the RAE to its technical status, and we have a sufficient and complete incentive licensing scheme, without anything to do with the Morse (Sorry, Vail) Code.

Arguments relating to international requirements are redundant - laws change.

Amateur Radio is dying, and this is due IMHO in no small part to the consumerism CBish activities of today, QSLing as an end in itself, WAB, contest operating other than as a means of evaluating one's technical equipment, squeakies on repeaters, walts on URA, and inane discussions about the turnips growing in one's garden.

Our current President served as an F-102 pilot in the Texas Air National Guard.

See:

Does that service not count for you, Len?

President Ronald Reagan (yes, he's dead) also served:

You should obtain a copy, frame it properly, and present it to management down at Roseta's pool hall, to be displayed when you do your

Why do those rules diminish your ability to "experiment"?

Do you want to send pornographic cartoons to other sicko's like yourself, enciphering them so you won't get caught?

Surprise, surprise, Gomer! :-)

Does the morse code TEST involve old sea dog legends?

I don't think so.

1964 was 41 years ago, Hans. By then I'd already had my Honorable Discharge for 4 years and had been working on Ku Band monopulse radar sets and test sets for same. For the first of the Grumman Intruders (A-6?) in the USN. DoD contract. All solid state except for the klystron RF generator in the hand-held RF unit.

Yes, UNSOLICITED private mail received.

It's a good thing there was no "male nudity" involved...Jimmie would have been very upset...Dudly might have tried to put up another private home page, this time maybe entitled "Don't Trust Hans Brakob, Master Grief!" :-)

BTW, I am NOT "binary-impaired." Google put the locks on binary attachments, not me or my computer(s). Had AOL still provided newsgroup forwarding, binary attachments would still have been locked out. That's just the way it is...

Maybe you have an old SP brassard you can put on and police Google, read them the Articles of the UCMJ?

"Anyhting?"

Go to: http://www.history.navy.mil/faqs/faq60-14.htm

You WILL find that it is EARLE with an ending E, just like his father spelled it.

Also in Wikipedia, a couple of Almanacs, etc.

>Spelling isn't rocket science, Len :-)

That's true, Jimmie.

I've worked WITH rocket scientists (and engineers) at Rocketdyne Division of (then) Rockwell International (now a Division of Boeing who purchased them a few years ago).

Have you worked WITH rocket scientists, Jimmie?

Have you ever been a part of an SSME (Space Shuttle Main Engine) test firing to test LOX flow instrumentation?
I have. Up on "Coca Site" of the Santa Susannah Field Test Laboratories in the mountains between Los Angeles and Ventura Counties.

Have you worked IN the space business, Jimmie?

Have you helped "reach the threshold of space" with a ham balloon?

I thought I wrote that? Do you know what an F-102 is, Jimmie?

Do you know the difference between it and an F-106, Jimmie?

I've had my hands inside both of them at Hughes Aircraft Company field in Culver City, CA. Took part in testing of the MA-1 fire control system for the F-106, initially using the F-102 as a test bed. That was in 1958-1960. MA-1 was the first - and probably last - vacuum tube based digital computer airborne fire-control system. Interesting stuff to know what that MA-1 could do...

Not particularly. Dubya was never activated from the Air Guard during a war time, Jimmie.

"Micky Taker" is, in reality,

Eric Williams, M3EJO,
19, Raglans,
Exeter,
EX2 8XN.

He is one of those disgraceful adults warned against by the OP; a grown man with seeming years of experience who was either too lazy or too stupid, or both, to be able to tackle and pass exams that were being taken in their stride by otherwise-unqualified 14-year-olds and went instead for the yellow-bellied coward's way out by going for exams set for 6-year-olds.

Eric did not seem to understand that the OP was a public stance for the maintenance of academic standards and that by responding with his Childish Broadcast (CB) in the way that he did he illustrated graphically the sort of turnip-brained dross that the OP warned against.

M3EJO is one of the licences issued under the gangrenous degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence and by taking out such a licence, Eric proves himself to be an incurable CBer who will _NEVER_ make it into the ranks of _REAL_ Radio Hams.

Eric seems to have missed the point that the OP was arguing in favour of the very acadaemic standards that Eric himself so dismally failed to reach - the issue is not one of the relevance, or otherwise, of the Morse Code, but the showing of sufficient dedication of putting in the necessary effort to get what you want. Going for an M3/CB Fools' Licence and then posting personal attacks in the way that Eric did is a sure sign of lack of such dedication.

Eric - you are a stupid boy and should grow up. It may well be that you wear long trousers but it is certain that your mind is still in nappies.

The Childish Broadcast (CB) quoted below would suggest that the 2 letters, number, 2 letters format used by Britland CB licences is also in use by Yankland in the KN6 series.....

Frank Dinger's Childish Broadcast (CB) serves to illustrate well the Trojan Horse of the CBer-Masquerading-As-A-Radio-Ham warned against by the OP.

Just ignore his outpouring - he is as irrelevant to _REAL_ Ham Radio as is the RSCB.

§97.113 Prohibited transmissions.

(a) No amateur station shall transmit:
(5) Communications, on a regular basis, which could reasonably be furnished alternatively through other radio services.

This rule here is outdated because technology has come so far that anything an amatuer station can do can be done through other service.

§97.113 Prohibited transmissions.

(a) No amateur station shall transmit:

messages in codes or ciphers intended to obscure the meaning thereof, except as therwise provided herein;

Although obscuring the mean isn't real a good idea in this day and age, code and cipher can have some value including allowing multiply persons on the same frequency at the same time, allowing for what band space we have become a little larger through encryption. Example like short spacing repeaters, and allowing multi-repeaters on the same frequency in the same town, just to name one

At first the law professors at the universities tried to stop campus recruiting, but the Supreme Court told them that they took federal dollars, so must allow fed recruiting.

Then the law professors decided to use freedom of speech to anti-recruit on campuses, "Hell No, We Won't Go!".

Encryption doesn't by it's nature enable frequency multiplexing;
that's something else entirely.

Spread spectrum allows multiple people on the same frequency at the same (by human senses) time, and is legal.

>What sort of legitimate communications would amateurs be doing "on a >regular basis"?

Really, any radio communication an amateur radio operator does can be done just as well through other communication services. The one main problem with amateur's is that they would rather debate the code/nocode issue instead of making advancements the art of radio. In the 80's if you wanted to talk over the world there was three way of doing it, regular mail, the telephone, and ham radio (the first two you pretty well had the know the person or a member of a pen-pal club). ham radio was the main means to communicating all over the world. Then suddenly, out of the blue technology oversteps amateur radio and now all a person has to do is get on the internet and chat. the only true thing amateur radio is good for now is emergency communications and that's about it. Amateur's have not done anything to advance the radio art. 97.113(a)(5) was writing to protect the other radio service who apparently felt threaten when that rule was written (which was a long time ago) by amateur radio operators. (Amateur's at one time competed with the commercial radio service and military) what I believe the FCC should do is ever two to three years go over the amateur radio rules and ask themselves do this rules need to be updated to keep up with technology? Some of these rules have been in place since the 1930's and haven't been changed one bit.

>Encryption doesn't by it's nature enable frequency multiplexing;
>that's something else entirely.

Somewhat true

>Spread spectrum allows multiple people on the same frequency at the >same (by human senses) time, and is legal

The problem with Spread Spectrum is that although it is legal in the amateur radio bands it is still tightly regulated, for example Spread Spectrum is only allowed on 70 cm or higher, and is limited by power and limited on system (ie there is I believe three forms of spread spectrum and amateurs many only operate two of them because third one violates the FCC rules as written) and the FCC is under the belief that ALL RADIO SIGNAL cross the state line and travel into foreign countries. As I stated although it is Legal, it very limited due to rules and regulations as written.

Besides - how do we know any of these "rocket scientist" claims of yours are true? You're big on demanding "proof" of all sorts of stuff, and rejecting people's claims. Why should we accept your claims? Pictures and verbiage on someone's website aren't "proof".

Is that a yes or a no?

So what? Does someone's military service only count if they are "activated during a war time"?

Let's see....Dan, W4NTI, was certainly "activated during a war time". He was the target of your
"few ounces of pressure" posts.

Dave, K8MN was certainly "activated during a war time". He was the target of your classic "feldwebel post".

I don't know if you consider Hans, K0HB, to have been "activated during a war time", but you sure don't show him much respect even though he has more military service than you. And he's NCTA!

Perhaps what really bothers you about K0HB is that he has better stories, and tells them better, than you do.

And while Hans is against the Morse Code test, and has been for a long time, he's for Morse Code use. That seems to bother you no end. Which proves that you're not just against the test, but against Morse Code use. And a whole bunch of other things.

Mark,

Who says "len" is not allowed to count the number of current, unexpired amateur radio licenses held by individuals?

Who says he can't post it here?

Not me.

Anyone who wants to can post the number of amateur radio licenses. www.hamdata.com is one source, but they include licenses that have expired but are in the grace period.

www.AH0A.org is another source of license numbers,
including those of other countries.

I don't use either of those sources for the numbers I post here.

No, no, no! You've got it wrong!

So, I suppose you're right in one respect - the useful contribution that you make to this NG and to _REAL_

"Other sources?"

The United States Navy, from whose Naval Academy James Earle
Carter graduated, spelled it "Earle."

The United States Navy, in which Lieutenant James Earle
Carter served, spelled it "Earle."

James Earle Carter, when he chooses to use his full legal name, spells it "Earle."

But, Jimmie Miccolis, self-proclaimed Master of All Things, is "other sources" who claim to "know better." <shrug>

Tsk, tsk, tsk, "other sources," don't try to bulldoze a mountain out of your little ant-hill faux pas.

When you've had some experience in REAL wordsmithing as an article-seller and editing, you come on back.

Nowhere in Title 47 C.F.R. is it stated that an AMATEUR radio license grant makes YOU "superior" to anyone in anything, regardless of license class.

So far in here, all you've done is to posture and post (seemingly endlessly) about how "right" you are in everything and how everyone who disagrees with you is so terribly "wrong."

>Does that somehow make >your opinions about amateur radio policy better or superior >to those of anyone else, Len?

If I want to find out the correct spelling of the legal name of a President of the United States, I can find it.
I don't need "other sources."

So far your little toy bulldozer hasn't made much of a dent in that faux pas "spelling" ant-hill of yours.

Here's a DOS Tip, "official sources:" Don't try to correct the USN, the Naval Academy, the Naval Bureau of Personnel, the official United States Navy History site, the state of Georgia, or the United States Government on the spelling of a former President's name.

>I've had my hands inside all kinds of things, Len.

Then isn't it time you washed your hands of this little spelling faux pas of yours?

>Besides - how do we know any of these "rocket scientist" claims >of yours are true? You're big on demanding "proof" of >all sorts of stuff, and rejecting people's claims. Why >should we accept your claims? Pictures and verbiage on >someone's website aren't "proof".

Contact the Personnel Department of Rocketdyne Division of Boeing Aircraft in Canoga Park, CA.

Do you need their mailing address? If so, contact your
"other sources."

I can name ALL of my employers from part-time during high school onward, and have. Have you done the same?
No? Why not?

Perhaps those "other sources" have your employment details? I'm sure they must, since you carefully AVOID stating anything yourself.

>Perhaps what really bothers you about K0HB is that >he has better stories, and tells them better, than you do.

I have no stories of "CW operating," Jimmie.

Never used morse code mode in over a half century, haven't been required to in either military or civilian occupations.

As to "telling them better," show your chops as a PAID-by-others editor and wordsmith FIRST. You are so highly biased in favor of morse mode that you are incapable of objectively critiquing any "story" for any mass media publication other than some "CW organization."

Hans sent me a copy of his "Speed Key" credential from the United States Navy. Do you have one of those?
Or do your "other sources" have it?

You were never in the USN or USNR. You were never in the Persian Gulf region. You were never in the service of the military of the United States.

We (other than "other sources") don't know if you ever did any radio communications in professional/commercial radio other than AMATEUR. You are carefully ambiguous and non-specific about that. Just like Dudly the Imposter.

[on living Presidents of the United States]

Senator Barry Goldwater was never elected President of the United States. He LOST.

>Wrong again, Len!

No, I'm right...Barry Goldwater didn't get elected President. I'm really not concerned about how WRONG your "other sources" are, Jimmie.

Now put that little toy bulldozer away. No matter how much you shovel it, that little spelling ant-hill faux pas is NOT going to get larger.

Go play with your AMATEUR radios. That will keep you in the house and busy this Saturday night.

This is getting to be a fun thread. Anal-retentive morsemen

I'm surprised Jimmie hasn't pulled out the old league understanding what this sub-thread is about...

Jimmie is busy, busy "serving" on keeping the code test forever and ever, perhaps using "CW" as a "weapon against terrorists" in our "war on terror!"

Yawn...

Gotta get those recruiter's out of the High Schrools and College Campi!

I see him in a different role. In a Safety Yellow colored vest with N2EY stencilled on the right side of his chest, a peace sign on the left, and "Emergency Services" on the back, bullhorn in hand, I envision Jim on College Campi, shouting down the ham recruiters, decrying the unjustness of recruiting practices that target young people, people barely old enough to serve in other ways, having to forego a lucrative careers in engjneering and technology, and instead serve "thier" country in a worthless endeavor. It's all soooo wrong.
Prolly smokin a doobie afterwards with John Foggerty playing "Fortunate Son" in the background.

The NPR reporters gather around to interview this oh-so-wise anti-recruiting patriot.

Pffffft.

Welp, Jim, I thought you were covertly trying to get us to find your "service in other ways." So I went to the Medal of Honor website and searched "Miccolis."

Search WWW Search www.medalofhonor.com

Your search - Miccolis - did not match any documents.

Suggestions:
Make sure all words are spelled correctly.
Try different keywords.
Try more general keywords.
Try fewer keywords.

This kind of reminds me of the time that Dave was desperately trying to get me to see that he was an A-1 Operator, except, unlike Dave actually being listed in the A-1Operator list, you are not mentioned on the Medal of Honor list.

Jim, I put on my thnking cap, reread Marks new thread subject, and his question in the body of his post, and nowhere do I see words to the effect, "Who says "len" is not allowed to count the number of current, unexpired amateur radio licenses held by individuals?"

Why do you change the context of Mark's question?

> Who says he can't post it here?

That question was not asked either. Marks speaks on "unsupervised counting."

Why do you change the context of Mark's question?

> Not me.

Yes you. You protest "unsupervised counting."

Well first off cartoons aren't illegal, if they were then ALL anime and hentai would pretty much be banned here in the United States, which it not in fact it growing. CNN Money stated in an article, this month that the anime industry is a $165 million dollar industry and is growing very fast. The law in question is a rehash of the Child Pornography Prevention Act of 1996 (CPPA) which was sruck down by the US Supreme Court as being unconstitutional because it made non-child porn illegal, child porn laws are not there to block what the person is saying, in fact in Feber vs New York the US Supreme court ruled that child porn itself was protected by the first amendment, it's the process on how it's made that makes it illegal. When the CPPA was struck down it not only ban real child porn and how it was made but "virtual porn" as well, was which is created out of someone imagination and no childern were harmed in the making of it. Thus CPPA was struck down as violating the first amendment. Real child porn is banned or made illegal because of the process of making it (i.e. the abuse of real childern) lolicon or japanese hentai, is created out of someone imagination an no childern are harmed in the making of it. If this new law ever made it to the court it too would probably be struck down as well. The Man who was found guilty by the courts for the cartoons also had real child pronography in fact this was his THIRD time for being busted. Although the anime part can be tossed out the man pled guilty without even fight it. but the man still had real child porn and that's what they really got him on. If a person was arrested for just cartoons it would be thrown out by either the US Court of Appeal or the Supreme Court, because the Supreme Court had already ruled that cartoons, painting and sculptures were protected by the first amendment. I don't mess real child porn or regular porn for that matter, I'm into anime and Hentai and have been since the 70's. What other charges?? and what o'rielly are you talking about??

"Not" A-1 Ops. That's right. It was an easy mistake to make. I mean who would have guessed that you were an A-1 Op?

You presented a list of r.r.a.p. posters who were A-1 Ops and proceeded to state with authority those r.r.a.p. posters who were not A-1 Ops. Apparently, it was another case where you didn't know what you were talking about.

No, Len, that's not true.

I don't use the name "Jimmie".

Second, I've never proclaimed myself to the Master of All Things.

Third, the other sources don't claim to know better.

Inflation will result in rising salary. Responsibility is subjective.

simple fact. Live with it.

That's just one employer, Len.

So can I. In fact I can name them back to part-time during grade school.

So what?

Why should I? What difference would it make to amateur radio policy?

Anyone who has read your posts here long enough knows how you react to other people's employment information. There's no job someone could hold or have held that would earn your civil behavior, let alone respect, if that person disagrees with you.

Hans does. They're good stories, too.

So what? There's lots of things I haven't done either, but I don't make a point of bragging about them.

> PAID-by-others editor and wordsmith FIRST.

I've been paid to do both writing and editing, Len.

But such employment is not needed for me to express an opinion of others' writing.

Hans tells better stories than you. And he tells them better.

They're concise, not wordy, yet all necessary details are included. They are interesting from a human standpoint as well as a radio standpoint, because they include a theme that is universal (the supposed hotshot Young Squirt getting his comeuppance for being a bit too brash).

Hans is able to express the pride, arrogance and embarrassment in such a way as to be humorous rather than annoying. He's able to laugh at himself in a way that makes the reader both laugh and sympathize.

A good story well told.

> You are > so highly biased in favor of morse mode that you are

O rilly?

Seems to me, Len, that you are so highly biased against Morse Code in any form that you are incapable of objectively critiquing any story involving Morse Code, Amateur Radio, or many other things.

> Hans sent me a copy of his "Speed Key" credential from > the United States Navy.

Pretty neat isn't it?

> Do you have one of those?

I don't think I have a copy of Hans' Speed Key certification, no.
Perhaps he'll send me one if I ask nicely.

I do have Morse Code proficiency certificates. And an Amateur Extra FCC license.

Is it wrong for me to have those things and be proud of them?

> Or do your "other sources" have it?

> You were never in the USN or USNR.

How do you know for sure, Len?

If you can somehow know for sure who has and has not served in the US military services, then you know whether or not K4YZ served in the US Marine Corps. Yet you demand to see his DD-214.

I think you're just trolling.

> You were never in

How do you know for sure, Len?

That's true. But he was a candidate, yet there was never any sort of special issue in QST. In fact, his candidacy and campaign were hardly mentioned in that mag.

Dear Santa,

This Christmas I would like a brain and some double A batteries to run it. Is Rudolph real? How is the North Pole? I would also like a bell from your sleigh and some crayons too. I color a lot and I was good all year and did not touch my sister one time. Can you put a rope through the hole in the bell and tie the rope to my neck so I can wear it every day and be a ding-a-ling?

is the fact that they think the material on my BBS is illegal when in

Of course you're in "the same mold", Markie.

Both of you are lying. That's what Feeble Fivers do best.

Of course Frankie isn't functionally illiterate or careless with his written word like you are, but then a lie is a lie no matter how well presented it may appear.

Oh...WAIT a minute, Markie!

I thought YOU were one of the guys who said that a "different

Guess we have MORE proof that NOTHING you say is to be taken for granted or face value!

I suggest that you learn something about computers - the qsl web site was working well in the 5 minutes immediately before
I wrote my original post (the one that got lost).

And, on checking now, it is still working; I wouldn't follow
if the roles were reversed, but you may like to try the following....

http://www.qsl.net/m5gwh/about%20me.htm

So, what happened? Did the infantile and aggressive persona that you present to this NG result in you getting sacked as someone being unsuitable to have contact with chidren?

I mean, in this report you seem to be the bee's knees,.....

But now you're suggesting that you're persona non grata?

What happened?

Or is this merely your attempt at FUD/Disinformation, and you were given an official warning the last time that you brought Maryhill High School into disrepute?

You think wrong. Len is as unnecessary and irrelevant to amateur radio

Todd has been promoting this "Intelligentsia" forum for several days, so out of curiousity we looked to see what he could possibly be presenting as "intelligent" on a forum, and what population of "Intelligentsia" would flock to such a board.

Imagine how un-suprised we were to find that there were NO messages (none, zero, nada, ZIPPO) posted by the "Intelligentsia". Even more un-surprising is that fact that the flock of "Intelligentsia" who are registered at that forum (besides Toddd) numbers (you guessed it) exactly NONE, even though it's been hyped in Todds sig line for quite some time now.

Good. I am for getting rid of the bad elements regardless of license class. Back in '98 concerning the restructuring, I told the FCC that what bothered be most about restructuring was a lack of enforcement and what bothered me most about maintaining the status quo was a lack of enforcement.

Not really. I hate to break it to you Jim, but MARS communications do not fall under AMATEUR RADIO, nor the FCC's jurisdiction. This guy could have ended up in a secret prison in Rumania. ;^)

Do yours read "NOCW" and "TEST"?

It might to you, but then again, you got the original story wrong too.
The book's author, Davis Grubb had a hard time with reality. In one interview, he said that he could remember that whenever an execution took place at the prison in Moundsville, the lights all over town would dim. That would have been something since, when Grubb was living in Moundsville, executions were by hanging. Electrocution wasn't begun until the 1950's.

You've really not watched the movie in some time. Another of Grubb's books was turned into a movie called "Fool's Parade" with James Stewart, George Kennedy and Kurt Russell. It was shot on location in Moundsville and Marshall County in 1970. You'd have been a natural "Fool's Parade" extra.

You'd like on top of, beside or under your tombstone. Love your "eitaff". That's about as mediocre as it gets. Maybe you could use

The Signal Corps has the highest casualty rate, or did you mean the U.S.
Army? Is that something to brag about?

What is any of that to you? You aren't involved in U.S. or any other

No, you are quite wrong on two counts.....
1. The qsl web site is definitely a site and not a page.

2. "http://www.qsl.net/m5gwh/about%20me.htm" is not an orphan at all, because if you try for "http://www.qsl.net/m5gwh", you get access to a fairly extensive directory.

I suggest that you learn something about computers.

If that's what it was, why would it bother you? That isn't, however,

Lao Tzu.

I found some Chinese proverbs which seem quite fitting to your role here:

"A crane is too obvious when it stands among a flock of chickens and looks very awkward. It is also true with a camel amidst a flock of sheep and a flea when it stands on top of a hairless head. They all carry a pejoritary tone: the thing that outstands others is something awkward if not necessarily bad."

You are the crane, the camel or the flea.

"There is an argument between a bird who stopped to drank at a well and a frog therein. They were arguing about how the sky looked like.
Regarding where they were, they each had a different view. The frog's vision was of course very limited. Therefore, this proverb refers to somebody who has a very narrow-minded and insulated view of what they see or what they think."

You are the frog.

That's at least the third version you've told here. Previously, you've waffled between the other two--that you were going to get the "Extra right out of the box or that you weren't going to obtain an amateur radio license.

What are you afraid of, Len? That radio amateurs won't show you the Well now! Yessir, that presents a real dilemma, doesn't it. You should be able to suck it up. After all, your military service was way TOUGHER than this easy civilian stuff.

That's funny. Jim knows what I've done in professional communications and I've seen no indication that he has ever become upset over it. Then again, I've never made it seem that what I did professionally carried any weight in amateur radio.

Yes - correct - but again this is a directory listing and not a website as, I state above, a website requires a definate 'index' or 'home' page.

It would be nice that once someone rejects an opinion that they say why.

Saying that Len doesn't hold an amateur license is not a good reason to reject Len's opinions wrt the ARS.

The regulations don't even define Morse Code let alone Farnsworth Code, but the FCC can deny a license based upon an exam it can't define.

Amateur radio regulations are a subset of "RADIO REGULATIONS."

The Signal Corps. The first target of any combat unit is the guy (or tank, amtrack, jeep, etc.) with the antennas. The second target is the guy -next- to the guy with the antenna because he is usually an officer.

> Is that something to brag about?

Yep. It takes some big, hairy balls to walk onto the battlefield carrying a piece of equipment that will be the first thing the enemy shoots at, especially when the radio is bulky and/or heavy enough to limit your mobility. The casualty rate for radiomen in combat is even higher than EOD.

What were the POLITICAL reasons, Len?

How is a non-ARRL history of amateur radio regulations any different from an ARRL history of amateur radio regulations, Len?

Can you cite specific things that are different in the two histories?

> POLITICS, little Jimmie. It's been pervasive

Even if true, is that a bad thing?

And how do you know? You weren't there in 1914, Len.

> A "one-> party" system more or less in between the World Wars > and on to the immediate post-WW2 era.

Nonsense, Len. The ARRL doesn't elect government officials.
Nor does it make regulations. One of its roles is as an advocacy group for amateur radio, just like the NRA is an advocacy group for those who believe in citizens' rights to firearms, and the AARP is an advocacy group for senior citizens (even though the "R" originally meant "retired", one doesn't have to retire to belong to AARP).

> By the 1970s

What other groups? And why the 1970s?

There were "other groups" back in the 1940s, Len. I don't think you can name two of the largest.

Actually, it does grade them. That's why there are different levels of amateur radio license.

Not at all. But radio amateurs sometimes do. You wouldn't know about that
since you've never done it.

Not at all. But radio amateurs sometimes build their equipment from the most basic parts - including sheet metal work. You wouldn't know about that since you've never done it.

Of course not.

"Choo-choo drivers"? The "drivers" on a steam locomotive are the wheels that are powered, Len. Do try to keep up.

Tsk, the way you ACT in here wouldn't get you to the "beginners" entry line to either SAG or SEG. :-)

You couldn't even pass for an A-1 Sauce dish at the caterer's table on a set, let alone as an "A-1 Op" in the movies. :-)

>It might to you, but then again, you got the original story wrong too.

Tsk, tsk, tsk, if you want to do rec.movies.critique.negative go to the appropriate newsgroup.

PCTAs have a hard time with reality also... :-)

No doubt the electricity was wired in by an "A-1 Operator."

Tsk, I just asked a question.

True, I don't make it a habit to watch creepy black-and-white movies about deranged characters.

It is much easier to access RRAP and watch all the creepy
black-and-white PCTAs pontificate, postulate, and pustulate all over everyone else. PCTAs are as deranged as could be.

>Another of Grubb's >books was turned into a movie called "Fool's Parade" with James Stewart, >George Kennedy and Kurt Russell.

No doubt you have a well-thumbed Leonard Maltin movie guidebook from which to draw your wealth of old motion picture factoids.

Somehow that doesn't qualify you as an "A-1 Op" in a cinema.

>It was shot on location in Moundsville and Marshall County in 1970.

Did that factoid make it into Variety or Hollywood Reporter? :-)

Was it in QST?

>You'd have been a natural "Fool's Parade" extra.

No. I don't have a SEG membership. Wanna see my AFTRA card?

>> "Corp diem?"
>
>"Corpus"

Tsk, tsk, a blank-and-white literalist. Colorless.

I was making a Play on Words between Latin and English. Since you only claim expertise on Hunnish, you couldn't understand it.

You didn't understand the Latin oxymoron "primus inter pares"
so it is useless to get you to unbend your dictatorial Prussian persistence in puling orders.

>Don't you get anything right?

I'm not an unbending blank-and-white ultra-conservative RIGHTIST. Reality requires recognizing shades of gray and being liberal towards others. You fail there.

Corporations have paid me real money to "get things right" and I have, consistently. Since you see things only by your dictatorial blank-and-white Prussian puerility, there is no point in trying to discuss any matter with you.

I'm sure you would give both Ebert and Roeper a "thumbs down" when it comes to movie reviews. However, THAT doesn't make you an "A-1 Op." Doesn't even make you good for A-1 Sauce.

...and a "Bone apetit" to Kathy Reichs and Tempe Brennan.

That's because r.r.a.p. isn't amateur radio.

How much power was used by the Army? How large was the antenna? Hams are now doing moonbounce wherein one of the stations is using a modest 50 MHz yagi and 100w or so.

There are two of your factual errors. I've never said that 1) you must have an amateur radio license to post here or that 2) anyone would need to obtain an amateur radio license before obtaining a commercial license. Since you've been corrected on those points more than once, your statements actually go beyond factual error and become deliberate falsehoods.

Thus speaks the Grinch. Well, Leonid, the lodge hall is sure to be warm and the talk needn't be just of the old days. It could be of last night's activity in the Stew Perry contest. Do you think your absence

True enough, Brian, but notice how Davie handles my statement.

I repeated the long-term fact of the FCC NOT mandating code use over and above any other mode, yet retaining the license test for morse code even though all allocated modes are optional.

That in itself would be sufficient cause to either eliminate the morse code test or make all amateur licensees use morse code over and above any other mode.

Davie just said "suck it up."

Rather than discuss law and regulations, he just goes for the personal denigrations schtick. Standard Heil procedure.

The parallels to the one using "K4YZ" are so remarkably similar that I just changed "Dudley" to "Dudly." Imposters are imposters.

Brian, the difference between you and Heil is that Heil is OFFENSIVE to just about everyone, regardless of his "veteranism." :-)

Maybe that is just Delayed Stress Syndrome as a result of all that "in-country" fighting with MARS rigs? Any lessons of "diplomacy" learned in all that Department of State service seem to have evaporated. Or being away from the USA in all that "foreign service" did something else? Difficult to ascertain.

Frank, I originally wrote ARMY, relative to Navy, Air Force, etc.

Davie, in an effort to be as dick-tatorial as possible, edited the quote to set up a following rebuke of the Signal Corps.

Department of Defense casualty figures are the reference as to which branch gives the most. Anyone can look those up.

In the Army the "front-line" (we called them just "line") radio users were just ordinary infantry, artillery, or armor troops who've had quickie courses in using their radios.

Those aren't Signal Corpsmen per se.

That used to be true but the paradigm has flipped over today.
The common manpack radio is the SINCGARS for land forces, both Army and Marines. The SIP or SINCGARS Improvement Program has resulted in a manpack radio that is half the bulk and half the weight of the original (beginning 1989) SINCGARS sets. Some 250 thousand total R/Ts were manufactured and operational as of the end of 2004, making that the most-produced military radio of all time...roughly double that of the PRC-25/-77 of the Vietnam era. I don't have any current figures on the SIP production-fielding, but the older SINCGARS cases-chassis (PRC-119) have been turning up on E-Bay, so there is a new beginning "surplus" area for "green" (military) collectors.

When I was in, we "rear echelon" troops would exercise in infantry training using PRC-6s and PRC-9s (manpack). Those VHF whips aren't that noticeable and the (about) 20 pound manpack radio was half the weight and bulk of the old WW2 SCR-300 Walkie-Talkie. Being of average height and build, I never found it limited my mobility much then.

During the Korean War active phase, the highest casualty rate got specialized to the pole linemen...extremely vulnerable targets at work with absolutely no cover but the pole. The Army got wise unusually quickly and set about getting lay-on-the-ground multi-channel cable such as the "Spiral-4" stuff used in newer terminal/radio-relay equipments. That was used more than aerial line pairs in Vietnam. I doubt that big, hairy ball USAF MARS operators in SE Asia ever noticed that.

The SE Asian topography and dictated limited movement of troops led to concentrations of communications on whatever hilltops could be secured. That led to concentration of enemy fire on those relatively concentrated units with resulting heavy casualties. The Army was stuck with most of those tasks although the Marines did some of those radio hilltops. USAF MARS operators weren't doing those things, despite their claims of "being in-country" as much as combat troops.

By 1990-1991 the "command track" concept of concentration of radios in certain vehicles was already lessening. Newer radios were more multi-purpose, multi-band, more agile and there were fewer tell-tale antennas to spot. Desert Storm isn't a good model for comparison since EVERYONE on land was ON THE MOVE in perhaps the quickest panzerfaust operation of any military at any time. It was largely armor-against-armor in an overwhelming over-run condition. The USAF and Navy Air had cut the Iraqi communications centers already during Desert Shield, leaving their ground forces with limited command track capability and little coordination. It was a rout for our side, taking only five days of ground war.

By the time of Dubya's War, things were turned around again. Humvees are the local "command tracks" all over and the targets of hidden bombs and mines. Those are indiscrimate as to whether they have visible radio equipment or not. Different game, different rules, different playing field.

While land forces have radios with excellent resistance to interception and jamming, we are up against Iraqis (and Afghanis) who aren't "radio knowledgeable" to any useful degree and don't know enough to look for "command tracks" or antenna concentrations. EVERYONE who wears a uniform in those areas needs big, hairy balls to venture about.

Happy Christmas

You "do a lot more" in what way, Mark? It can't be about the commandments of God--you don't believe in God.

I may be wrong, but I don't think there is a "9" in "certainly".

That's incorrect. When the spelling and grammar are all hosed up, the reader spends his time trying to find the hidden meaning. He might be wondering how anyone could allow such stuff to escape his computer before it has been gone over for spelling and content. If you had any intention of imparting wise words, it is wasted by burying it in gobbledy-gook.

I won? Delightful. Mark, I come into contact with a large number of people who don't happen to share my views on any number of topics. I like many of those people. I don't like some of them. None of them are heathen, dyslexic bisexuals who see themselves as victims and who refuse to better themselves. It is my right to not associate with those whom I abhor.

Because although code and cipher can be used to obscure the meaning, they can also be used for practical purposes which are not yet investigated. The rule was created back in the 30's for the simply reason, which holds today, the goverment view is that although amatuer help with emergency communication amateur's can't be trusted. Amatuer's since the very beginning were seen as a threat to national sercuity.
The rule was created to keep "spys" and other foreign govenmental agencies from using ham radio as a tool to sent classified information from here back to their native land. I mean what other purpose who this rule be in place but because of that fact. Now what changes would I make to this rule?? well I would leave the rule as is however I would have the rule in manner point to 97.309 (b). 97.309(b) is the rule that states amateur can use unspecified codes provided they are not used to obscure the meaning. The problem I'm having is amateur operators who only look at 97.113(a)(4) and don't look at 97.309(b) and are under the impression that coding is not allowed.

The transmitter used was a modified SCR-271 radar unit. It produced 3000 W on 111.5 Mc. (that's what the Signal Corps called them back then). Pair of 6C21 triodes in the output - they look similar to 1000Ts.

3000 W output with those tubes at that frequency means about 5000 W input.
The amateur power limit back then was 1000 W input.

> How large was the antenna?

64 dipoles in front of a plane reflector. At least 24 dB gain over isotropic.

There's a lot more info at:

http://www.campevans.com/diana.html

btw, it was a moon RADAR experiment, not a communications system.

The mode used was OOK CW. The echoes were heard as beeps. Had there been a second station, communication could have been done by Morse Code.

But no Morse Code was used because no communication was done. There was no second station to communicate with.

Those Diana folks had a some hams involved, though - all code tested at
at least 13 wpm:

Lt. Col John H. DeWitt, officer-in-charge, W4ERI, ex-W4FU

E.K. Stodola, head of the lab's Research Section, W3IVF

F. Elacker, Mechanical Engineer, ex-W2DMD

H.P.Kaufmann, W2OQU was also involved at a high level.

Those are just the hams I know of that were involved. There were probably more.

Note that a good number of the top people were radio amateurs.

They used power levels 9 dB above those permitted to amateurs at the time, and an antenna that was quite beyond "backyard construction". They had lots of resources.

Lt. Col. DeWitt, W4ERI, was the driving force behind the whole idea, which he first began working on in 1940.

A few years back, a couple of hams (both code-tested, at least one an Extra) did microwave EME with less than 100 W and dishes less than 10 feet in diameter - at both ends. Using their own resources.

The ARRL actually produced a special "Defense Edition" Handbook for training purposes.

There's also the story of "The Ghost of Guam".

You seem to believe yourself the only person here who ever was paid for writing or editing. We know from your frequent factual errors that research isn't your thing. Thankfully, most magazines have good proofreaders so your misspellings were likely kept to a minimum.

It needn't say it there, Len. I have an amateur radio license; you have no amateur radio license. In amateur radio, even if my ticket came in yesterday's mail, I'm superior to you. Live with it.

You needn't be terribly wrong, Len. You're usually just plain wrong.

Perhaps you've found your niche! You can become superior in the correct spelling of U.S. President names.

They aren't likely to provide any details of your employment, Len. You haven't POSTED PROOF and I'm beginning to wonder if you aren't some sort of Rocketdyne Imposter. How do we know that you're the SAME Len Anderson who actually worked for Rocketdyne? How do we know that you aren't a FAKE--a POSEUR????? :-) :-) :-)

I can name all of the employers I've ever had--ever. I have done so in the past but I'm not inclined to share the list with you.

It could easily be said that you are so biased against morse testing and morse use (as evidenced by your whining about K0HB's tale of SUQ) that you are incapable of objectivity.

I took your post to heart, Len. I use my radio equipment to make a number of contacts in the Stew Perry event, but I found time to post here as well. What did you do?

If you'd like to play games, asking about whether a fictional character play it your way. If you play the little, red-hatted monkey, you'll be treated as a little, red-hatted monkey.

What idea? To bounce a signal off of the moon for no communications

Isn't that like bouncing a basketball off of a backboard with no

The "Ghost of Guam" was US Navy Radioman 1st Class George Tweed. He wasn't a ham. Was reputed to be laid up drunk in a house of horizontal refreshment when the Navy evacuated the island just ahead of the WW-II JA invasion so he missed his ride. Had to hide out in the jungle for a few years until the USN came back. In the book/movie "No Man is an Island" he comes off as a hero, but was in fact not popular with the locals, several of whom (including a native RC Priest) lost their lives for not revealing his whereabouts. After the war he skedaddled without so much as a thank-you.

Len has no background or experience to make him a credible source of

See, Brian, civilian life can be tough indeed. The Army told Len what it wanted, how it wanted it done and how long it expected him to work at it each day. It told him where and when to show up for meals and showed him where his bed was. There was nobody shooting at him. I suppose he could have suffered a hangnail or he could have spilled hot coffee in his lap. Yet this grizzled veteran has told us all about his irrelevant (to amateur radio) stories of his "big time" radio work in the military on countless occasions. Sorry, I liked K0HB's story of SUQ a lot better. It entertains and it doesn't rankle.

W/O George Tweed, USN, RM1c. Also KB6GJX. He was left behind on Guam and eluded capture by the Japanese for 31 months, until the island was retaken by American forces.

He was aided and kept from capture by the efforts of the Chamoru (Guamanians), who hid him, kept him supplied, and would not give him up despite large rewards offered by the Japanese occupiers. The Japanese tortured and executed many Chamoru inhabitants, including a Roman Catholic priest, on the suspicion that they had information on Tweed. But the they never gave Tweed up.

One version of the story may be read and seen in the book and film "No Man Is An Island".

I have read that Tweed is not fondly remembered on Guam. Postwar accounts tended to portray him as a lone heroic figure, and to downplay or even ignore the terrible price paid by those who helped him.

The radio connection to all this is that while Tweed was hiding from the Japanese, he built and operated several receivers, and was able to give the Chamoru accurate war news. He even wrote a small newspaper to circulate the news.

If that's correct, then what about Len's statement that "it bore the brunt of national defense as it always has since 1776"? The Signal Corps did all that? I'm sure my dad would have made some comment to

I wouldn't know, Dave. I got my leg perforated in Beirut and I was only packing a Simpson 260. Not much experience, I grant you. But since that happened several months after most of 1/8's comm platoon got wiped out by the barracks bombing, I really didn't have a chance to get -their- opinion on the subject.

I take it that -you- have a different opinion?

LOL at an_old_idiot retard who is too stupid to know there never was such a cartoon 'caharacter' (learn to spell moron). Maybe you can get a job helping 2test clean out those port-a-potties. Sounds like a job you might be able to handle given enough training.

To expand on a theme suggested by Scott Adams (or maybe it was Moms Mabley) I've decided that rrap is dangerous because it gives morons a vehicle express their opinion, and thus to inform other morons about what their fellow morons are thinking.

This only serves to as a sort of moron-snowball, where the feedback validates, and reinforces moronic opinions, such as "it's OK to have a stash of pornographic cartoons of 8-year-old girls being sodomized by demonic anime(als)". And the one thing more dangerous than a moron with an opinion is lots of morons with the same opinion.

Both of these restrictions are in conformance with the provisions of the International Radio Regulations to which the US is a signatory.

That's what sets the Amateur Radio Service apart fron other services. Without them, there would be no amateur service...the commercial radio folks would make sure of that.

You really have to stretch for a comeback, don't you, Woger? But you still haven't answered Todd's question about your own excuse for

No problem. "All parts are interchangeable" in the land forces, something that's been mentioned for decades...before I was in and will be long after today. Soldiers are soldiers first, specialists second.

USUALLY, but not always, the infantry radio ops are infantrymen with some short training in their manpack radios. Signalmen are found from Battalion level and up to Brigades, and do the mass-communication stuff for Brigade through Division command.

Field radio equipment has been designed for wired-remote control (many hundreds of feet away, as needed) of transmitters for over a half century. Major reason being RDF might be able to pinpoint an emitter and drop some nasty stuff on it.
The personnel at the control point won't necessarily be hit so those are still survivable. If the comms equipment is destroyed and no replacements are available, the signalmen revert to their basic duty: Soldiering the infantry way.

Not quite. That stuff is PR material that's been out for years. The Army tried out the "squad radio" concept in Vietnam during the early 1970s. Didn't work out well and that was generally abandoned for wholesale use on the line.
I don't know WHY it didn't work out since I've never been involved directly with it, just the manpack-to-high-power-vehicular-amp families of "regular" (in ham ideas) radios

and some other interesting DoD stuff. :-)

Back in 1990 the land forces had the AN/PSC-3 radio with voice and data capability on the military aviation band, three different antennas from whip to wire mesh parabolic reflector. The data part had a "chiclet" keyboard and a small LCD-like screen and messages could be typed in, stored, sent at 1200 BPS on UHF, either to an airborne radio relay or through military comm sats. Can't verify if the data part could be encrypted, but today's PSC-7 can do that. The PSC-3 was used in unfriendly territory during Desert Shield and none were compromised. Some old-timers in here thought the military was still using something like WW2 OSS HF sets with morse code during the first Gulf War! :-)

The present-day survival radios (HT size) can cooperate with the DME of TACAN to yield distance information and their voice is both digitized and encryptable. Same size as 20-year-old survival radio-beacons but have more electronic features and better battery packs.

The AN/PRC-104 HF manpack transceiver (operational 1986, will be replaced soon by an updated unit) by Hughes Ground Systems has an automatic antenna tuner integral to the manpack R/T. One can physically shorten the whip by removing sections to cut down visibility and the antenna tuner will compensate for the shorter sections. Won't be quite as efficient as the full whip but it is less visible on the ground. The lil 20 W PEP transmitter will shove as much RF into the whip as it can without damaging itself.

While I haven't been with the Army units testing anything in the last half-dozen years, I can see that the "command track" concept (actually a command vehicle, a Humvee now more than a Bradley tracked vehicle) is still strong. That lends itself to the "many antennas" visibility for un-friendlies who have some smarts on sorting out targets. With two NVIS whips (bent-over long ones) and a couple VHF, UHF antennas on a Humvee, those stand out pretty well from the ordinary gunner-style Humvee. There are "mini-huts" for making up a Humvee into a radio command vehicle holding lots of radios inside...similar to the full-size hut on a deuce and a half flatbed.

Armor units have the flashy toys now with a couple dynamic (on the move) automatic positioning location and reporting systems still undergoing more field testing. [why, I don't know, they were first out in the field a decade ago] Artillery can confirm its position super-accurately with military-mode GPS in the little HT-size "plugger" or AN/PSN-11 receiver. The same plugger can connect to any SINCGARS radio to update its calendar clock for good networking in FHSS mode; GPS provides a super-accurate time base. Plugger was in use during Desert Storm.

I haven't followed the progress of the SIDs (Seismic Intrusion Device) that first saw service in later years of the SE Asia Live-Fire exercise. My RCA division in Van Nuys did the casing and geophone amplifier-filter-processor, me doing the final whip design desired to be a simple wire rather than the original OD tape style. Buryable unit intended for Vietnam but that war ended early without full deployment. It could distinguish between two-footed and four-footed creatures and report back (by coded radio signal) detection of the two-footed variety. In the three decades since there must have been improvement in that area. <shrug>

There's more stuff coming along with the first signs of in SIGNAL magazine published by AFCEA along with Defense Industry Newsletter.

The latest is an RF psycho weapon using ultra-wideband microwave stuff to scare-shock-disturb unfriendlies at a distance. First operational test contract was awarded a couple months ago. While it uses radio, it might not be handled by signalmen at all, probably not by artillery types either. Psy-war units? :-)

The first NODs (Night Observation Devices) were operational during the latter half of the 1960s and used in Vietnam. Too many were stolen/captured with the USSR making their own versions. Now those "Buck Rogers" devices can be bought at sports stores as a regular consumer electronics product. <shrug>

RADAR is an acronym for RADIO Direction And Ranging.

Radar was perfectly legal for the DoD to use. The FCC has no governance on the government radio energy use.

"PRF?" With an echo return delay of 2 1/2 seconds, isn't much good for lively back-and-forth anything. 0.3 Hz PRF could be used. :-)

The USN put it to use in communications first, simplex only with, I think, RTTY. I'll have to find the excellent USN paper "From The Sea To The Stars" history somewhere on an archive CD here. Has the history of the USN involvement in space and communications thereto, from an official USN website.

He wasn't there but he was there.

Tsk, Jimmie thinks "communications systems" arrive full-blown, fully-proven? :-)

Project Diana was an EXPERIMENT to test whether or not the moon could be used as a radio wave reflector. It was and what followed were more experiments by many to determine what the frequency ranges were, the reflection characteristics.

There wasn't any need to "radar" the moon. The moon's orbit has been accurately known for years, if not centuries. We can all make certain of where it is. No radar needed for that.

>> The mode used was OOK CW. The echoes were heard as beeps.

Really? :-)

Civilian at Fort Monmouth Signal Labs told us it was first observed on an oscilloscope, one of the long-persistence phosphor types used in some radars then.
Of course that was told to us in 1952 AT Fort Monmouth by one of the experimenters. Since he didn't give a ham call sign Jimmie would suspect him of lying. :-) 1952 was only 6 years after Project Diana. The experiment was fresh in his mind and, having been there as part of it, could recall much.

Uh huh, like Coles, Evans, and Squier laboratories was busy, busy on ham radio research in 1946? :-)

In reality, the 1945-1950 time was one of transition from a world war effort to peacetime and lots of the movers and shakers in technology-intense war efforts were out to carve new niches for themselves and their groups. Good PR was the word of the day. A "moon bounce" thing was hot PR at the time, attracted attention from the budget-keepers in Congress and the Pentagon.

That "111 Megacycle" radar was already surplus before WW2 ended.
Not a problem. :-)

Anyone riding a bus to Red Bank from Fort Monmouth could look out and see lots and lots of "junk" at two of the labs along the highway in 1952, just 6 years after the Diana success. All sorts of "bedspring" antenna structures were sitting in the vehicle parking areas.

In 1940 that ancient Project Diana radar set (the original, not the kludge version used IN Diana) was still undergoing operational testing. Even then it was a late-comer using rather conventional vacuum tubes in the usual ring-oscillator circuit...the style of transmitter used by the Brits for radar along the channel.

The Brits would come up with the magnetron to make microwave radars the future practical success. We would incorporate those in all the later radars at S, C, and X bands during WW2. The "star" of Army radar was the semi-trailer size
SCR-584 gun-laying radar set which was definitely well above VHF in frequency range. Those were far from "surplus" in 1946. Monmouth had a couple for radar school practice in 1952. :-)

>Isn't that like bouncing a basketball off of a backboard with no >intention of making a basket?

Jimmie "Knows" what was intended, deep in his heart. He "felt"
it 59 years ago.

The concept of reflection of radio waves was well known in basic radio physics in the 1940s. What was lacking was some definite information on the characteristics of radio wave reflection. Nobody had any CONFIRMED idea of the reflectivity of the lunar surface in the 1940s.

>> > ... During WWII, the Signal Corps used the ARRL
>> > Handbook, Leonard. I'll bet that chafes you to no end.

I really don't think so, having known a lot of USA, USN, and Air Corps vets who trained during WW2. Some of them said they used a USN basic book. Nobody mentioned any "ARRL books." <shrug>

A 2-hour lab class one afternoon had us examine a bunch of "basic hardware" of radio. One item was a two-tube MOPA style HF transmitter. That MIGHT have been made from a ham design although it didn't tune into ham bands that existed then (instructor told us so, monitored on an old Hammarlund receiver). We didn't take notes. In fact, written notes were discouraged. Not for "secrecy," but for the need to have it in the head, much more useful in the field which didn't allow for notebooks or stacks of magazines for reference which could get rather wet.

In 1952 at the Signal School in Fort Monmouth we (at least in radar basic classes) used training films on basic principles and Army FMs, TMs for paper study, some mock-up training aids that included a "block of frozen RF" (acrylic plastic 3-D waveguide fields and waves, roughly the size of 1 GHz guide). I'm not acquainted with what was used at the Field Radio and Telephone schools at Camp Gordon (now a Fort) used.
Monmouth in 1952 was basically for radar training with advanced schools for the VHF, UHF, and microwave radio relay sets...and photography, then a part of the Signal organizational envelope (photography is now under the media graphics specialty groups, not part of SigC).

As I remember the old ARRL handbook from the late 1940s, I can't recall a heckuva lot of multivibrators or radar or microwave information, nor of servo motors (but there was a mention of Selsyns, surplus for beam indication).
Perhaps the ARRL had to exorcise all that "wartime literature" because of "secrecy?" :-)

What amazes me is that every time this "faq" is sent to the newsgroups, the same idiots respond to it, and get into a flame war. When it dies down, it only requires the repeat of the same message to get the same idiots stirred up again.

Sort of a Pavlovian response. I guess for some, it might be fun to watch dumb animals drool. Maybe it's a UK thing......

The thing you need to bear in mind is that of the current 55 messages in that thread, no less than 23 - not far short of half of the total - were in fact posted by the OP. Some of these involve him posting - or barking - replies to himself. I wasn't aware that Pavlov had trained

The Wise Ones live in the depths of the D, E, and F-Layers, and in the servers at Yahoogroups.com. They are the descendants of the Gods. I personally subscribe to the theory they are the children of Thor Heyerdahl, the Viking god of Thunder and Balsawood Raft Dxpeditions. But that's another story.

The Wise Ones criticize everything that happens on the air and on this list, but they can't police every pileup or every Yahoogroup by themselves, so every morning, just before daylight over Katmandu, the Wise Ones select the "Mostest Intellegentest Ham Ever" in their layer and convey upon him the title INFLICTOR OF HIGHER MORAL HARANGUES. This title and its duties last until the following dawn on Bouvet, if someone is there to observe the sunrise. Otherwise your duties end when Riley Hollingsworth gets tired of your crap and sends his lawyers with a gag order.

If you are ever chosen you will know because a representative of the Wise Ones will anoint your temples with oil from a forty year old bottle of Dr. Guano, collected on Ocean Island by VR1L in 1963. For that day you will be known as The Chosen. Your duties will be to seek out those that don't do things the way you do them (in other words, the right way.) When you find them, it will be your duty to correct them.

Think about all the ills of ham radio that you can police .....too wide, too weak, too slow, too fast, what's your call dammit, wrong VFO, rotten fist, QRQ, QRS, poor pileup control, wrong band, wrong QSL route, you timed out the repeater, wrong lingo, not enough green stamps, you're in the DX window, no-coders not allowed, coders suck, ... these and many other sins are all your to root out and expose!!!

When you find these wayward ones, you will lumber onto their frequency, stand up in your operating chair and shout, I AM A BETTER HAM THAN YOU, SHUT UP AND LISTEN. You will now have the wayward one's undivided attention. He will think about this very briefly, then yield to your superior intellect and ham skill. He will be very receptive to your thoughts and point of view.

Lecture him and proceed to the next wrong doer.

Now for the sad part of this tale. There are pretenders and charlatans out there who try to usurp the rightful powers of The Chosen. To you villainous few, I say beware. The Wise Ones also created BAWA (Baddest Ass Whats Around). No matter how bad you are, BAWA has the ability to be badder. You will know when you start your lecture and Bawa yells back, "You're a jerk, but I'm a bigger one. LET'S ESCALATE".

And you will have no choice.

But soon BAWA will tire of you and sink your little balsa boat. As you slip under the surface you will yell, "BUT I WAS RIGHT, DAMMIT" and you will once again prove the ancient mariners axiom -- AN OPEN MOUTH TAKES ON WATER.

Hans,
You've missed the point which is that we are in a privileged position as the result of our educational achievements. Allowing the standard represented by those achievements to fall such that turnip-brained CBers are perceived as our fellows is the route to Company-Built (CB) rigs only, and our hard-earned right to build our own gear will be lost.

It's not a question of snobbery, but one of preserving the world of _REAL_ Ham Radio.

One version of the "squad radio" was the PRC-68, a cool little VHF-lo rig. The problem was the radio wasn't built very well (mic screen kept falling off, battery boxes dented easily, antennas broke, etc), and the batteries were expensive, didn't last very long, and weren't compatible with any commercial equivalent.

We had the PRC-104 in the early '80s; the RT was used as the exciter for the MRC-109/110 (400/1000W) jeep radios. Mechanical push-button tuning from 2-30 MHz. I still want one.

I heard about that a couple years ago. Not a psych weapon -- it causes significant "discomfort" in the eyes and skin at a distance. It is/was intended for domestic purposes (i.e, riot control -- make sure to wear your aluminum-foil hat to the upcoming anti-war rallies).

I plainly stated that on HF they are limited to 200 watts. I did not say nor imply that VHF/UHF was the same. Since anyone can read my paragraph and compare it to your remark about VHF/UHF for themselves and see the difference, there was no need for me to comment further.

Dearest Friends,

It becomes my painful duty to write you a letter of apology instead of sending you the Christmas remembrance that I had intended for you.

Knowing so well the appetites, likes and dislikes of my close friends, I made up a list of twelve of my best friends and went down and bought twelve quarts of eighteen-year-old Glenmorangie single malt whiskey. Nothing but the very finest for my friends. I took this home and put it in my closet and intended to put it up in nice Christmas packages and send it out to you late this week just before Christmas.

K0CKB got to fumbling around in the closet and found the liquor and didn't understand just what I intended to do with it. So she came up and told me to empty the contents of every bottle down the sink, or else. So I proceeded with the unpleasant task.

I withdrew the cork from the first bottle and poured the contents down the sink, with the exception of one glass which I drank. I extracted the cork of the second bottle and likewise poured the contents down the sink, with the exception of the glass which I drank. I pulled the sink from the next bottle from the cork of the next and drank one sink out of it and threw the rest down the glass. I pulled the sink out of the next glass and poured the cork from the bottle. Then I corked the sink with the glass, bottled the drink and drank the pour.

When I had everything emptied, I steadied the house with one hand and counted the bottles, corks, glasses, andsinks with the other, which were twenty-nine. And, as the houses came by, I counted them again and finally had all the houses and bottles and corks and glasses and sinks counted, except one house which I drank.

So this accounts, dear friend, for your not receiving a more stimulating Christmas present than this letter. I sincerely hope that from some other source you get all the joys and happiness that come from Christmas remembrances.

"May the Good Lord take care of you, but not too soon."

All anyone has to do is google that title and the website's URL will come right up.

Project Diana demonstrated EME radar echoes in 1946.

Amateurs demonstrated radar echoes in 1953.

The Navy first demonstrated EME communications in January 1960 (RTTY, Washington DC to Hawaii).

Amateurs demonstrated 2-way EME communications in July 1960.

It took the US Govt. 14 years to go from the EME radar experiments of 1946 to a working EME communication system of 1960.

Was it?

Or was it an experiment to prove that VHF radio waves could penetrate
the atmosphere from the earth? (It was already known that radio waves could do so in the opposite direction, from radio astronomy experiments before WW2).

Or was it a gee-whiz sort of stunt to be the first to do something and try to impress people?

Or maybe some of all of the above?

The British used it effectively. They had relatively crude equipment but skilled operators and an effective communications network.

Without their radar capabilities the Battle of Britain may have turned out
differently.

The reentrant cavity magnetron, actually.

The "star"?

How about the airborne radars? Air-defense radars (some so well developed they were built into submarine periscopes)? Radio altimeters?

None of which had the power or antennas to do EME anyway.

In my opinion and experience, that's a poor method of training.

The act of creating a notebook means the student must mentally process the information and write it in his/her own words. In other words the student must take an active, rather than passive, role in the process. Of course the notebooks cannot be depended on during testing, but that is not their purpose.

Note that in other training systems, such as qualifying in WW2 submarines, the creation of a notebook with all required information is an essential part.

The entry level license is 1,500 watts.

Looks like Jim ran out on this one, too. Thanks for playing.

Waffle House.

But I am wondering...Who eats anything YOU have put YOUR hands

So...You acknowledge that you DO support "child pornography"....

But the FACTS are that Todd Daugherty, N9OGL, DOES support child

You're into child pornography.

Even the suggestion of acceptance of children engaging in adult sexual activity is sick. That there are people like you who find a way to "openly" hide your activites is even moreso.

The "problem" for people like you is that you "get away" with stuff like this for now, but it only emboldens you to other acts.
Sooner or later, you'll find yourself behind bars wishing you'd exerecised your "Freedom of Speech" on something more meaningful that the concept of children having sex.

Sure I am...Toiddie. I've already proven that I can effect change. Why do you continue to suggest otherwise?

No, I don't suggest that ANYthing is going to happen over night....but it will...

Like I said, Toiddie...the problem for people like you is that letting you "take an inch" means you'll eventually try to take a mile...And in that effort you'll lose your freedom. But then the rest of us will be just a little bit safer from people like you!

Notice the use of a question mark, Markie. I know that such marks

Non-ARRL histories of ALL RADIO regulations don't have the obvious political spin that ARRL uses to attempt increasing its membership.

That's just the way it is...

>Can you cite specific things that are different in the two histories?

Oh, YES, I can. But that takes time to write about 100,000 words or more. Write up a contract on that book and send me an offer. I'll ask a minimum of $75,000 advance on the compensation for my time and effort just to start.

It postures as if it does...stating bluntly that it is the "representative of amateur radio!" :-)

It certainly tries to! Tries to for a MINORITY of licensed radio amateurs in the USA.

How? Be specific. Be detailed. Show your work.

Amateur radio is BASICALLY a hobby, Jimmie.

I will admit that some folks see it as a "way of life", especially when they don't have much other life. <shrug>

It's just a HOBBY, Jimmie.

>> Entirely true. FCC is NOT an academic organization, "grading"

There are different CLASSES of amateur radio licenses.

Can't you get anything right?

The FCC is NOT an academic organization or agency.

Those CLASSES of license were arrived at through regulatory politics.

>> Tsk. Jimmie, you just don't understand how the military works.
>
>I understand well enough, Len.

You aren't ANYWHERE close, Jimmie.

Everyone in the military puts their LIFE on the line, 24/7, as long as they are in.

NOWHERE in amateur radio is any licensee required to do THAT.

When you put YOUR life on the line, then you might understand, Jimmie, but not before.

>> Did you expect that everyone had to build everything themselves?!?

Plain and simple WRONG, Jimmie.

INCORRECT. I've built equipment "from scratch." INCLUDING the "sheet metal work." :-)

From the initial notes and sketches on paper to more detailed plans on vellum to getting the parts, doing the breadboards, finalizing the physical layouts, laying out the circuit boards, masking and etching the PCBs, "bending the tin" (an expression in aerospace for sheet-metal work), using the metal brake, using drill presses, mills, lathes, tapping the screw holes, wiring up the components, assembling everything, then testing and recording the operation of the finished product. That was just for HOBBY equipment, Jimmie. :-)

At WORK I've done all that plus a lot more...and been responsible for the completion of the final design to established milestones, setting up and doing the environmental testing, going out in the field for the corporation to assist the customer, being responsible for million-dollar project completion plus all the interdisciplinary design review meetings and reports before managers as well as giving pitches for contracts up for bid.

Why not? I've helped do that...and I'm NOT an "airman." :-)

Not good enough for you? Hamdata gets theirs right from the FCC database. Where does Speroni get his? Crystal ball? :-)

>Is that a threat, Len? You're not even a novice at amateur radio.

Why are you afraid of perceived "threats?" Guilty conscience?

>> Residences are for LIVING in, Jimmie. It is HOME.
>
>SO why shouldn't it change?

This newsgroup/morseblog isn't about zoning ordinances or real estate, Jimmie. Nor is it about trailer living...wherein trailers can be towed someplace else for "change." :-)

Which trailer park are you living in now, Jimmie? Isn't it time for a "change?"

I've lived at this same residental address for 42 years, Jimmie. Some of my neighbors have lived in their for longer. Why should we "change?" Especially for some easterner who doesn't know the territory, doesn't know the neighborhood, doesn't know any neighbors, doesn't do anything but try to make trouble for those who have opinions on amateur radio testing other than his? :-)

>Now it's clear. You weren't top of the form in Morse Code, so the >code must be a bad thing....

Plainly and simply inaccurate and plainly and simply just your personal insult mode trying vainly to masquerade as "civil" discussion. The mask is quite transparent. We can all see through it. Take it off, it will be more comfortable for you.

Jimmie, TRY to understand the 53 years ago morse code was NOT the ultimate skill in radio operation on communications circuits. Yes, radiotelegraphy was used by many, but it was NOT necessary in relaying tens or hundreds of thousands of messages a month worldwide. Teleprinting was necessary then and it was used for the majority of military, government, and commercial messaging around the globe. That's just the way it was...

Today the "need" for radiotelegraphy skill has atrophied down to some amateur radio hobbyists who cling to the myth that it is "necessary" for obtaining an amateur radio license. Even then that myth is not universal nor does it represent any "consensus" among those that have obtained the "highest" CLASS amateur radio license. That's just the way it is...

I've just never had to USE any radiotelegraphy skills nor wired telegraphy skills for ANY REASON...and I was DOING long-distance HF communications before your existance.

If you wish to build up your atrocious EGO and say everyone is (or even should be) "jealous" of your telegraphy skill, then you are a deluded person who is troubled and needs some mental therapy to better get along with others...and that's the way THAT is...

Oh, oh, the Dominatrix is extending her whip, demanding Order

Here's some "facts" written by others in here:

"FCC doesn't license radio amateurs."

"MARS >>>IS<<< ham radio."

It appears that way to many, many readers of this morseblog.

This newsgroup is NOT a movieblog or a literaryblog.

UNBEND, Davie. :-) You are too wound up and literal. :-)

"Night of the Hunter" was released in 1955. That means that actual filming was done in 1954. You were IN the USAF in 1954? That doesn't fit with what you've said before in here.

>>> It was shot on location in Moundsville and Marshall County in 1970.

Is that the movie you are referring to? You aren't being clear in your remarks on film production.

Of course, this morseblog isn't ABOUT motion picture production, is it? :-)

That may be because so many amateur radio "practitioners" are

I have. That's why I oppose the regulation of requiring a singular mode test for radio amateurs when the regulating agency makes that mode as optional to use as any other allocated mode. :-)

CIA, DIA, DCAS, DoE, IEEE, RCA, EOS, MRI, all my employers.

INCORRECT. I'm not the "ONLY" one. :-)

Don't you get anything right? :-)

My "frequent and numerous factual inaccuracies?!?" :-)

Davie boy, you will have to do much better than that little INACCURATE statement of yours. :-)

Let's look at the PCTA "side" and check out some really big MISTAKES written by The Chosen Ones:

Who wrote, on 10 December in here:

"The FCC doesn't license radio amateurs."

Or, a year to two years ago, frequently:

"MARS >>IS<< amateur radio."

Davie, you just settle down and don't spazz so much on certain folks. You only make yourself look pompous, arrogant and you

I'm not familiar with the MRC-109 or MRC-110, but a reference on C4I has that compatible with the AN/VRC-49 which is FM in the 30 to 76 MHz region.

The AN/PRC-104 basic R/T was used in the AN/GRC-213, a vehicle mount configuration with audio amplifier and DC vehicle power supply conditioning, 20 W PEP SSB output. The AN/GRC-193 is also for vehicle mounting, uses the basic R/T, but includes a 100/400 Watt linear amplifier for transmitter and a higher-power antenna coupler/tuner.

The basic R/T has digit push-wheel frequency selection (like digit thumbwheels but with a single button mover). The AN/VRC-11 through AN/VRC-49 had, variously, 10 push-button or rotary switch selection of frequencies in the 30 to 76 MHz region, FM, and were compatible with the AN/PRC-25 and -77 VHF FM sets. The lower number VRCs I've seen all have chromed push buttons, something left over from WW2. :-)

I'll have to get out my aluminized Nomex full-body suit! :-)

The "riot control" version was an R&D model. DoD has upped the ante with a fieldable system contract awarded for testing on whoever wherever they want to try it.

>Yeah, I have a Soviet unit that takes 2 AA batteries. Hmmmm.....

In 1967 the U.S. military had three field models of NODs. Electro-Optical Systems division of Xerox in Pasadena produced one of those models. Three were stolen/turned-up-mission that year, feds in there asking questions after. The production manager "resigned."
I have no idea where those missing NODs wound up but I read reports in 1970 where the USSR military now had them. First ones were "blotchy" in imaging and sensitivity didn't have any automatic gain control but they could enable anyone to "own the night." They have improved considerably since 1967.

...the sun sets on the Tomb of the Unknown Solder as a solitary figure in a patch-adorned flight suit slowly paces out his lonely path of anger, J-38 in one hand, bayonetted surplus USMC soldering iron in the other. Pre-recorded marine marches softly fill the air, interspersed with beepings of a few PCTA morsebirds not yet extinct. The Tomb of the Unknown Solder is a lonely place, deep in the Wannabe Valley, full of neuroses, anger, and frustration. The single sentinel counts cadennce to himself, muttering "flux you, flux you" between the slow steps. His fists are clenched, eager to do bottle but only sipping a cup of unkindness. Sadly the sentinel at the Tomb of the Unknown Solder keeps going. There is no rosin for what he does and that is the tragedy. The sun slowly sets on the Tomb of the Unknown Solder leaving only the red light of fire in the eyes of the muttering sentinel. Those glow in the dark like demon pilot lights. Hatred lives on in his twilight of despair.

Temper fry.

Oh?

Where? When? So far, your only "station" assets that you've owned up to are an old Icom and a scanner to listen to LAX ATIS on.

Seems that despite all the alleged background in electronics and computer technology, you can't seem to make one picture of your

YOU aren't valid in this forum. Thoise OTHER radio services are NOT the focus of this forum.

AMATEUR RADIO is.

Also operated the ZIA net for several years when in-and-out of the Southwest.

And Lennie...."operating" on the Condor net only required TWO things (neither of which you have...) A valid Amateur Radio license

And despite those 42 years, it really sucks that anyone who might buy a property and pay the required taxes TODAY would have EXACTLY the same voice in making CHANGES to those zoning laws...Huh Lennie...?!?!

And Lennie...Do I see YOU arguing against CHANGE just because

No steve the problem is NAZI's like you who don't like what a persons say, and instead of ignoring it you feel compelled to "do something about it" thus supressing the persons rights.

Sounds about right. On this one the lens is pretty good quality but the electronics are nothing more than a noisy inverter and a finger trigger. Suprisingly sensitive tho, especially to short IR.

What "obvious political spin"? Give us some examples of where the ARRL history is "spun" or inaccurate. For example - were there others besides amateurs who achieved low-power
2-way transatlantic shortwave radio communication before November 1923?

FCC makes the regulations.

ARRL tries to get FCC to change or keep certain regulations. So do others like NCI. Yet NCI has a membership of perhaps one percent of licensed US amateurs.

So what? The fact is there were other groups back then trying to change the regulations.

Do you know the name of those groups and what they tried to change?

Not just, Len. Whatever it is, you're not part of it.

Not amateur radio equipment for your own use in your own station.

That's the point.

But not for amateur radio equipment. And not using just your own

All by yourself? Or with the "help" of an engineering team?

Actually, they do go to school and are licensed for the job.

Wasn't talking about the Condor Network. Was talking about the amateur AH0A gets his numbers direct from the FCC database. But I don't use AH0A's numbers.

hamdata.com's numbers include expired-but-in-the-grace-period licenses. The numbers I use do not.

I've been a radio amateur for 38 years, Len. Some other hams here have been radio amateurs even longer.

Why should we change?

I'm not saying you should change, Len. I'm simply pointing out that you're a nonamateur tells others that they have to change but doesn't accept change himself. Just like the outsider developer who came into your neighborhood and tried to change the zoning, you try to change the amateur radio rules.

At least the developer was willing to become part of the neighborhood by purchasing the land. You folks drove him bankrupt. But you aren't even a part of amateur radio, yet you want the rules changed.

You resisted change to zoning, but you ridicule and call names of anyone who tries to resist change to amateur radio regulation.

See your double standard? Others have to adapt, not you.

btw - you accused at least one developer of "payola" to the zoning commission, and also that the zoning commission accepted the "payola". Pretty serious charges. Care to back them up with facts?

Depends on which "communications circuits" you mean. You always seem to spin away from "communications circuits"
like those used by the US Navy...

But you have no such license, yet you keep trying to force others to change. Just like that developer....

"Existence".

You also haven't been a radio amateur at all.

Maybe, Markie...just maybe...if you exercised just a weeeeeeeeeeee bit of initiative, you could follow the headers and see that this fellow and I are not one in the same.

But then THAT would require that you acknowledge that your paranoia is unjustly founded, and might be a severe shock to your already unstable mindset. But try it anyway, PaganBoy. You need the wake-up call.

Looking at the current license structure and the high (IMHO) probability that morse testing will be gone sometime in 2006 the ability to get on HF will then only require passing the General written. Indeed, there may be a percentage of Techs that already have passed the written, but not the code, and will be able to do a paper only upgrade when the effective date of ending code testing comes about if they have a recent enough CSCE for the General written.

My question here is with regards to the Tech licenses that haven't upgraded and perhaps may never upgrade.
How many current Techs ever operate at high power levels (with high being set at 200 watts or more)?

I personally believe the number is close to zero but I'm curious if anyone in this newsgroup has any other personal insight or anecdotal information.

Cheers and more to follow over time.

Well as far as I know, very few in our club run anything over the power that is available in the radio itself regardless of license. I've not heard any of the Technicians speak of running high power.

Bill,
good question. I think the answer lies in Economics. Equipment that can run at high power levels (800-1500 watts) is generally fairly expensive (even the used stuff isn't cheap) and for the most part, most HF rigs are priced high enough to prevent those "living on the edge" from ever really getting into HF operations (except as maybe qrp stations).

It would be interesting to see how well everyone does if all we had were QRP rigs (<50 watts) to work with.... That would be the real challenge, working the entire world on any band on under 50 watts.

Judging from the number of Technician licensees running high power on both 6m and 2m SSB, I'd say the number is nowhere close to zero. It is a small fraction considering the number of Techs who never operate anything but 2m FM through repeaters.

I don't come across Techs here running high power SSB and I am in a major metropolitan area (one of the Detroit suburbs). I seldom come across them operating VHF/UHF SSB at all. However, I'm glad if you have significant numbers in your area.

Just for grins and giggles, I took my log from the last VHF/UHF contest and checked all the call signs (I only worked about 50 stations). Most of them were Extras with a smattering of Advanced and Generals. There was ONE Technician and since he was local and rather weak, I doubt if he was running high power.

I didn't run across significant number of local Techs running high power in the early 1980's and prior when I operated from Cincinnati either.
There were eight or ten though and they were all active in working

SSB/CW on the VHF/UHF bands. The fellows I work from here currently are scattered across the Midwest and along the Eastern Seaboard. You're right though, that most of the fellows running higher power are those with General, Advanced and Extra tickets.

High power isn't necessarily difficult to achieve at the typical VHF/UHF frequencies. An SB-200 or SB-220 is easily modified for a KW or so on 6m. The surplus FAA amps sold by Fair Radio are easily modified to deliver 300-350w or better on 2m and they are quite inexpensive. There are some solid state bricks capable of doing 300w or so output on 2m but they require a lot of power supply, adding significantly to the cost.

While things get a little tougher at 432 MHz, there are some used K2RIW-type amps available used and such designs are pretty easily constructed by anyone with a little skill.

I acquired used amps from WB8ZTV which will deliver 700 or so watts on 144 and 432 MHz for $500. I currently run about 300w output from a single 4CX250B on 6m but have a Heath HL-2200 (pair of 3-500Z bottles) ready for modification to 6m. That one will do a KW out easily with 100w of drive.

1948. General purpose logger

My all-time favorite jeep (general purpose) logging program is HyperLog, but support has been discontinued, so I'm shopping for a new product.

Bought EQF-logger, but after a few months of use I still haven't gotten used to the kluge-operator-interface, so I've written that one off.

Here's my list of MUST HAVE features:

An intuitive, non-rodent-centric operator interface, similar to the simplicity of Hyperlog or CT (Mouse OK for non-routine functions, but logging sequences must be touch-typist-hands-on-the-keyboard-no-need-to-watch-the-screen.)

Radio control integration

LoTW integration

Import from ADIF

Good support from the author

Any suggestions?

We can start withn YOUR "forged" use of e-mail aliases that don't belong to you, and follow it up with your "tag" line that includes false allegeations of abuse, etc, and phone numbers that don't belong to anyone in this forum.

That's just for CURRENT events.

Then we can go to your retasking of subject lines with profanities.

Hi Hans,
You should most certainly look at EasyLog (www.easylog.com).
I have used it for a number of years and also tested other logging softwares, but always turned back to EasyLog.
Take a look at it and feel free to contact med with questions.

Well I don't know if any of the operators I worked were running high power or not. All that I could determine was their license. I only ran 100watts but did pick up some quite distant stations (including WV) and they had no trouble hearing me. What I was attempting to point out was the scarcity of Techs on SSB & CW VHF/UHF.

Have you tried N1MM? Though I don't know how well it works for large databases and I've only used it for contests although it can do general logging.

Some people speak highly of the DXLab suite. I haven't tried it myself though.

Well Markie, YOU are the one who says it's OK to change the meaning of accronyms, words, phrases, etc, without establishing mutual understanding with your intended audience.

YOU have sid that it's everyone ELSES "problem" if they don't understand YOUR "use" of any given word, even when it IS within establsihed context of a subject, IE the word "drafted" as it applies to military service...

Must be a Michigan thing.

Northern Lights Radio Society, a Minnesota VHF/UHF contest group, has no scarcity of Techs on the roster or in on-the-air activities, predominantly SSB/CW contesting on VHF/UHF

Could very well be. There are plenty of Techs in our club too. However their main interest seems to be community service (supporting walkathons, etc) so perhaps it just regional differences in activity preferences. The club I belong to is very heavy into these community activities and we usually have no trouble getting enough volunteers. Though one time there were three activities on the same day so we were a little thin that time.

1998. K1MAN REQUIRED READING ESSAY: THE LIFE OF KAROL

THE LIFE OF KAROL - 18 December 2005 - ES051218A - (draft)

by

Glenn Baxter, P.E., K1MAN
(written in the third person)

I have just finished word for word reading of The Life of Riley, including all footnotes, dated March, 2005. There are various and very serious defects in this otherwise very informative and basically correct document. Riley and ND8V need to go, but Karol feels that K1MAN will go instead. No so. K1MAN is too smart for Riley, ND8V, K3VR, AND Karol. K1MAN's weapon is the U.S. Constitution. For K1MAN this is child's play.

FIRST

The most serious fault regards the concept of "frequency ownership." The problem with Karol is that the Polish calling frequency on 14.273 MHz. came into conflict with K1MAN and IARN on 14.275 MHz. beginning in 1985 with IARN emergency operations and then in 1987 with K1MAN Amateur Information Bulletins. One main purpose of the information bulletins was to "establish" 14.275 MHz. as an emergency frequency so the contesters would not wipe out IARN emergency operations due to lack of knowledge. The Polish calling frequency on 14.273 MHz. is too close, and the logical thing to do would be to move to 14.272 MHz. or ask IARN (and the Bermuda Net, of course) to move to 14.276 MHz. Another idea would be to move the Polish calling frequency to 14.272.5 MHz. and ask IARN (and the Bermuda Net, of course) to move to 14.275.5 MHz.

I do remember some discussions with representatives from the Polish group, and their position seemed to be "We will not move, you move..." or something to that effect.

Now, the FCC rule of using the spectrum most efficiently kicks in. If IARN moved to 14.276 MHz., there would still be a problem with the Bermuda Net who opted to have K1MAN's license revoked with the eager assistance of ARRL instead of moving themselves or working out a mutually acceptable schedule. Etc. K1MAN has always tried to negotiate in good faith in order to be within the FCC rule of cooperating with respect to selection of frequency. It is hard for a bona fide bulletin station or a bona fide emergency organization with substantial track record (such as IARN) to come up short in such negotiations.

The smart thing for the Polish to do would be to slide down to 14.272 MHz. When K1MAN took two years off (to teach) from 14.725 MHz., ND8V and associates jumped from the "zoo" on 13.313 MHz. onto the 12 year K1MAN established 14.275 MHz., and the turf war began. Sorry, but ND8V was right. 14.273 MHz. IS too close to the more heavily occupied 14.275 MHz. (by more than one group). The Polish were outnumbered, and common sense still called for the Polish to slide down.

Recently, Karol tried to slide K1MAN to 14.274 MHz., just occupied nearby by ND8V on 14.273 MHz. ND8V was wrong to be on 14.273 MHz. (just as the Polish are wrong to be on 14.273 MHz.), and K1MAN would be wrong to slide to 14.274 MHz. Two wrongs don't make a right, and Karol should realize that such poor practive by K1MAN could easily be translated (in the current K1MAN/FCC legal environment) to criminal proseedings against K1MAN by "Rot Riley" Hollingsworth, FCC Special Counsel. Was Karol also sick on the day they taught law at law school?

The "Life of Riley" asks Hollingsworth to get into a juvenile frequency dispute turf battle which "Rot Riley" played to the hilt with his campaign against K1MAN (with IARN, AARA, and information bulletins barley mentioned at all by Karol - what's with that?). Sure, Riley is corrupt, and sure, ND8V is "enabled" by Riley to break the law, Mike's reward for his cooperation to nab K1MAN. Same deal was implemented with KV4FZ. Then KV4FZ was dumped into the fire (with WB2OTK and K1MAN, almost!) just as ND8FZ will be dumped into the fire with K1MAN is Riley has his way; he won't.

Karol mixes his issues and the net result is his Polish friends are involved with something that could have been avoided years ago by sliding down to 14.272 MHz. where his war with bigot ND8V could be easily won, hands down.

SECOND

Karol is very "anti American," it seems. He has stated to me that he does not care about the U.S. Constitution, something I would gladly die to protect. (Blood is thicker than water!) Bad image for Karol if he want to constructively and therefore effectively criticise the U.S. We can take it; we need it actually! Also, ethnic slurs against "Red Necks" and "Stupid Land" and how dumb ALL Americans are is not too smart as far as amateur radio public relations goes, but Canadians are not too smart, are they? Hi! See what I mean? That stung didn't it?. Such generalizations are taken quite seriously by many if not most. How about "All Canadians are stupid" or "All Pollak's are stupid." Ouch! See what I mean?

THIRD

Personal attacks (weight, mental problems, intelligence, etc.) against anyone is always a sign that you are losing your fight. Not a winning strategy, in my view.

FOURTH

Karol needs to define his goal or goals. These are quite unclear to me. Two good goals would be to move the Polish to 14.272 MHz. and not be harassed there plus to constructively criticise America; we welcome a Devil's advocate. I welcome it anyway. If Karol wants to "nix" the U.S., he will lose. We have the aircraft carriers, remember? Sam and John Adams and company set up a pretty powerful group down here in Amarica, and we are not done yet!

FIFTH

Karol should reign in his "potty mouth" on amateur radio. It makes him, his military college, Poland, and Canada look very bad. His childish references to "sucking" or otherwise "doing" Riley in the bath house are illegal here in the U.S. and that would be more than enough for Riley to issue a Notice of Forfeiture and win big, big, big against K1MAN if Glenn did likewise. Make no mistake, I say that Riley is a cheap and corrupt polition playing ND8V like a grand piano, and what he does in the "bath house" is not relevant, of course.

This is America. Anything goes. Market forces sort it all out. The current market forces dictate that potty mouth on amateur radio and national television is out. Even Janet Jackson's bare boob is out. The ancient Egyptians flaunted their boobs all the time. It is great to be a king, isn't it? Hi, of course.

ND8V and K3VR were dealt on air mortal blows om 16 and 17 December 2005. The pen is mightier than the sword!!!!!!!!!!!!!!! Both can recover if they are smart. I still have hopes for ND8V. I am afraid that K3VR and Riley are toast, however. They are going down.

FINALLY

Karol can do better and fix things by acting better in public. His intellect and wit are awesome. Clean it up, Karol, define your goals, and we can make one hell of a difference in both amateur radio and in the lives of all of our listeners. The latter (and the new talk show) has the very real possibility of becoming huge and blowing both the FCC (rather Riley and his FCC support), K3VR, ARRL (and ND8V) right out of the water. Carpe diem!

Trying to set me up for a weapons conflict with the government here at K1MAN might be aimed at illustrating your anti gun Canadian view, however, our Constitution prohibits advocating the overthrow of our government by force. Not very smart, Karol! Also, this plays right into the hands of Brian, the fraudulent Crow.

I have all the tools I need right in our Constitution to beat those punks, hands down. We Americans are not as stupid as you suggest. You are not as smart as you think. I am playing at Level I, Riley is at Level II, Brian is at Level III, and you are at a distant Level IV. If you really think I am "going down," as you say, then you are at Level V or posibly as low as Level XX.

I think you are all wound up with anti American sentiments and it is clouding your judgment. Come down and sit in my chair for a day and see just how smart you really are! You would go down, and hard, here on our U.S. playing field, and fast. Yes, you have "free" health care but no aircraft carriers. Your kids and adults are not in Iraq. Good for you. We will gladly let you switch roles with us, old pal from the North! We don't plan to let punks like Hitler and Stalin (or Saddam, or anyone else) gang rape our mothers!

Don't like America? Just wait and let us hang ourselves if you really think we are THAT stupid. When we run out of fossil fuel we will all freeze anyway. eh? Except those in "stupid land!"

73 and GL de K1MAN

My ass cheese is green,
My ass cheese is black,
My ass cheese smells,
Like my husbands nutsack.

My lips smell like fish,
My lips smell like eggs,
My lips dangle down
Way beneath my legs.

My pussy runs hot,
My pussy runs cold,
My pussy looks rotten,
But it is quite old.

The more I scratch it,
The more sores I create,
The more I rub it,
The more I masturbate.

My twat oozes yellow,
My twat oozes green.
My twat has been used,
By a whole football team.

My warty puss looks good,
When it's hot, warm and wet.
My warty puss feels yummy,
When it's licked by my pet.

This is specific to current Tech license holders.
Two questions depending on your being either Tech (no code) or Tech+ (with code):

If you are No code Tech, do you plan to upgrade to General once the code test is eliminated
as a General requirement?

If you are Tech+ now, any particular reason
you haven't upgraded to General?

That percentage must be rising now thanks to the M3/CB'ers licence as so many Hams class it. Before I would say it was very low as it doesn't involve shooting people, stealing mugging or raping. Now it takes no effort there will be plenty of them using the radios to co-ordinate robberies and gangland shootings... yeeee haaaaah good buddy.....

So what's wrong with being racist? Why let your neighbourhood turn into a shithole.....

The only thing more idiotic than someone who posts a hundred new

Smart guy: "Hey Dudly, want to see a polish trailer?"

Dudly: "Why yes, I would like to see a polish trailer."

Smart guy: "Alright then, just follow me."

Dudly: "OK."

Now I've played that joke on some really dumb people in my time but none of them took longer than a couple minutes to figure it out. Even retarded lab rats have enough intelligence to realize when they have

Well, Bill, here's some anecdotal information from some people I know.

I was talking to my brother, who is a Tech+ about why he has not upgraded to General. There are two reasons. One is that since he is not very active and does not belong to a club, he did not know that the General only needed a 5wpm code test now. The second reason is that at the moment he is heavily involved in boating as a hobby and just doesn't want to take the time right now. However, he is keeping his license current. So perhaps someday he'll get around to it.

My OM is a General but he stayed at Tech Plus for over a year before upgrading. He was simply having too much fun on VHF/UHF SSB and 10m SSB to take the time out to study. He probably has enough grid squares for the VUCC if he had records of everything.

Topic: "Why can't stevie be usefull as broken clock" (sic)

Marks' initial statement: "after all they are right twice a day" (sic)

My on-topic comment: "That'd seem to make them a couple of times better than your average".

My comment dealt directly with the topic you set. It addressed the broken clock, Steve and the poster, you. So, it was all on topic and you cut it because it didn't sit well with you. Tough.

Bill, when I was a Tech, the max power I used on VHF+ was 170W on 6M, and 160W on 2M, 10W on 220, 35W on 440, and 1W on 1.2.

If I were writing the rules for an Entry Level license, I'd limit HF to 100W and VHF+ to 50W.

Once the hard work of eliminating the code is done, we need a top-down review of the ARS and try to make sense of the kluged together license classes and priveleges that these FCC R/O's have left us with.

Then we make more proposals to the FCC and in another 3 or 4 years they get around to looking at it. Could it be that our official spokesorganization has developed an adversarial relationship with the FCC?

in my experence the number of blacks hams is sabout half the population numbers but YMMV

just for the halibut I have noticed the hispanic hams seem to in line with population pretty well, asians seem a bit over the popualtion numbers, and women are way off less in proportion than blacks, Blakc women hams though seem relitively more numors than to balck males and white women to white males

those are my experences as i said YMMV hating the fact I will now sound like bill Clinton but that depends on the maeing of the word "anomaly"

but K1man seems to be bit further out than most hams although I am not certain any of this stuff published as if it were his is in fact his many hams hate him so much they will say anything about him

but ham that nuts are common

we have K4YZ that states lying on the interent is child abuse and pedophilia, and that anyone who disagress with him is a homosexual Dave who says their is nothing wrong with Knowing help other to break thier own laws if he can claim DXCC credit in the process. N2ey who seems to recite the whole histoory of Ham radio QSO by QSO in answer to question, and that is just here on RRAP wether this mean K1Man is an anomoly in your eyes or not I realy can't say but I'll report you decide at least a quarter of hams seem to prsent some real ego problems

what I wrote. Digest it.

Not respobile, Mr. Whitman, responsible. Yes, others must accept personal responsibility for what they do. You empowered them to do so with your unwise personals post. In the end, no reposting of your rather bizarre personal ad would have been possible had you never done it in the first place.

I know you don't have enough sense to be embarrassed about the ad but that an accident of mismanaged obstetrical care?

stevie if you are a Nurse and not engaged in a truely massive case of ID theft then you would know I can't be forced to to accept "help" without being an overt danger to myself or to others, and you should also know I don't meet that standard. You are close I'd say you were 2131. If the answer's, "M3", it must be a bloody silly question!

A joke for the Winter Solstice season, largely known as "Christmas" because the Christians have shown their true mettle over the years by burning at the stake those who opposed them, and yet who have parasitised so much of their opponents' beliefs such as Yule Logs, Holly, Ivy, sacred sites and the choice of this time to year, all as a means of insidious propaganda.

What a truly nasty sect are the Christians! (They even went so far as to torture those who claimed to be Christian but who objected to rule from Rome, seeming to lose sight of the fact that the origins are not in Rome but in Palestinianstan!)

If the Christian god really exists, then he must have a pretty sick sense of humour - sending that Tsunami last Boxing Day. He must also be pretty thick - in an age that has encompassed the postal service, carrier pigeons, heliographs, semaphore, telegraphy, telephones, radio, television, GSM, GPS, Satellite TV, and the Internet - when he wants to communicate with humanity he sends a tsunami? That God seems as thick as those who believe in him!

Anyway, to keep this on topic, taking the lead from the title of the thread.....

Q. If the answer is, "Cockrobin", what is the question?

This excitement causes a wish to share the experience
with ones fellow man, and shows itself in the gentlemanly traditions of Ham Radio.

Radio Hams are in a unique privileged position in that they can construct and operate their own equipment! No-one else has this privilege. Users, such as broadcasters,
the po lice and armed farces, CBers and mobile phone users have to purchase ready-made gear. Manufacturers are not licensed to operate their gear. Radio Hams
are qualified to design, build and then operate their own pieces of equipment. They do this with gusto, and also repair and modify their own equipment. This is a privilege well worth the effort to gain, and one to be jealously guarded.

The excitement that drives a Radio Ham starts with relatively simple technologies at first, perhaps making his own Wimshurst machine and primary cells. Small pieces
of test equipment follow, possibly multimeters and signal generators. Then comes receivers and transmitters. It is with the latter that communication with like-minded technically motivated people takes off. The scope for technical development grows with the years
and now encompasses DSP and DDS. There is also a great deal of excitement in the areas of computer programming to
be learnt and applied.

The technical excitement motivates Radio Hams to compete
with each other to determine who has designed and manufactured
the best-quality station. This competitiveness is found in DXing, competitions and fox-hunts.

-----OOOOO----

However, beware! A Ham Radio licence is such a desirable thing to have that there are large numbers of people who wish to be thought of
as Radio Hams when, in fact, they are nothing of the kind! Usually such people are a variation of the CB Radio hobbyist; they buy their radios off the shelf and send them back to be repaired; they are not interested in technical discussion
and sneer at those who are; they have no idea how
their radios work inside and have no wish to find out;
they are free with rather silly personal insults;
they have not satisfied any technical qualification
and their licences prevent the use of
self-designed-and-built equipment.

These CB types engage in the competitive activities
with their Cheque-Book-purchased off-the-shelf radios
in a forlorn effort to prove that they are Radio Hams.

No _REAL_ Radio Hams are deceived by such people!

-----ooooo-----

One infallible way to disambiguate the CB Radio Hobbyist
from the _REAL_ Radio Ham is to solicit their view of the difference between CB Radio and Ham Radio. A Radio Ham will perceive Ham Radio to be a technical pursuit and will perceive CB Radio to be a social communications facility
no different in essence to a land-line telephone or a GSM mobile in the hands of a 6-year-old. Thus a Radio Ham
could also hold a CB licence safe in the knowledge that such a licence says no more about him than having a land-line telephone, whilst continuing to regard Ham Radio as a separate technical pursuit.

A CB Radio hobbyist, on the other hand, sees no difference between a Ham Radio licence and a CB Radio licence. To him, they are sisters-under-the-skin. Wrongly, the CB Radio Hobbyist then
tries to classify himself as the equal of the Radio Ham when, in fact, he is nothing of the kind. A sure sign of a CB Radio hobbyist is if he holds, or has ever held, a licence
issued under the gangrenous degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme.

-----ooooo-----

One group of people who claim to be of the standard of Radio Hams but who are in reality nothing more than an apology for the failure of a CBer are those class B
licensees who falsely proclaimed that they were against
the use of a Morse Test to control access to the HF
bands, until, that is, a test was introduced at their intellectual level, the intellectual level of 6-year-olds.

6 year-olds simply lack the mathematical tool kit to enable them to handle even the simplest algebraic manipulation
for Ohm's Law and thus, the disgraceful Class Ber's in the aforementioned category are not Radio Hams by any stretch
of the imagination!

Remember - A sure sign of a CB Radio hobbyist is if he holds,
or has ever held, a licence issued under the gangrenous
degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme!

I don't celebrate and have withdrawn from the prezzie cycle for some years because it's a most difficult time for alcoholics and the time of year when one is most likely to have a "slip"
(as it is termed in AA) if one is not on one's guard all the time.

However, as I have to find humour from within myself and not rely on some external drug, on the occasions when I do go to social gatherings, I am accused of being the drunkest person present!

So, alcoholism has one big advantage - I don't pay out loads of shekels to give to other people loads of things they don't really want and get in return loads of things that I don't really want! The spare cash that I have goes to the purchase of components that I do want!

PS.There's a new condom on the market this Christmas, the "Sant Claus" model.

It's 6 foot long!

Why? Because he only "comes" once a year, and when he does, he fills up your stockings!

My personal reasonal reasons for celebrating Christmas is to look back and on my previous 12 months achievements, also to take time out from a busy work schedule (the aerospace industry doesn't run itself you know!!) and spend time amongst friends and family. Even exchanging gifts as a token of appreciation for being there thru the ups and downs of the past year and to look forward to whatever the future holds. A beer here, a spirit there and the odd mince pie does no harm.Indeed, a wondorous time for even the strongest disbelievers!

....and a good excused to get pissed for a week and a bit!!!

And an interesting revelation recently was that the

The only "point" you've made is that you have mental health issues that are not addressed by proper therapy.

Was that a sentence?

As for anyone being "rude", I guess the blatant theft of others callsigns for use as Yahoo aliases pretty well puts YOU right in the middle of it.

You're the one being rude, Markie...Withness the 600 posts, most

Yes, Markie...The whole NG INCLUDING Dave and I understand EXACTLY what is going on.

You're a functionally illiterate, mentally challenged, socially inept little dweeb whose whole life pivots around being a meaner, more deceitful, dishonest troll.

No lies. No threats. No gay bashing. No pagan bashing. No spreading of hate.

Just showing you to be the aforementioned idiot....And YOU just keep adding more and more to the "proof" pile.

Thanks.

I DID ask the right person, Markie.

You said (to Pierian) "why do you bother ###hole"

And I agreed...I asked Pierian why he was bothering you...That WAS your question...

Nope.

YOU claimed I made some claims about your hive status. Scroll up

I've NEVER discussed your hive.

No it't not.

It's from old Google or Yahoo archives which are NOT the "Phone Company".

YOU claimed it was "the Phone Company" which insisted that that is my phone number.

It's not.

Not true.

By publishing the number you've exposed an innocent third party to harrassment that they have no reason why they'd be getting it.

You HAVE harmed people.

phone number.

I must take you up on that slur, for you seem to have misunderstood, (perhaps deliberately?) what is being said.

There is no hate whatsoever in welcoming with open arms all those who wish to be part of the technical pursuit that is Ham Radio.

There is no hate in setting ourselves apart from those who are not Radio Hams in an effort to preserve our hard-earned rights.

There is no hate in correcting those who have been misled by some desperate Billies-No-Mates to think that they are Radio Hams, when, in fact, they are nothing of the kind!

No. There is no hate whatsoever in what I publish; merely a statement of who we are, and encouragement to exert themselves to those who would join us!

Does anyone know how frequently a DSSS system may change channels? At some point it has to resemble a frequency hopping system enough that it falls under the rules reguarding hybrid DSSS/FHSS systems.

47 CFR Part 15 section 15.247(g) does say that "a [hybrid]system employing short transmission bursts must comply with the definition of a frequency hopping system and must distribute its transmissions over the minimum number of hopping channels specified in this section. "

This seems to suggest at least that a bursty DSSS system that changes channels must follow the rules for FH.

Can anyone out there clarify things?

Just continue using your channel changing DSSS and don't worry.

NWTAP, but his postings are more symptomatic of bipolar disorder than of senile dementure.

Focused rage at the new licensing scheme, misdirected rantings at the new licensees who are merely progressing through the licensing régime as it now stands --- mixed with a manic fixation that everybody else in the UK shares his rage, and that he alone can fix it by repetitive posting of the same tedious drivel umpteen times a week. The other fixation with (as he puts it) "kiddie fiddlers" is indicative of the heightened libido often associated with manic depression.

In any case, if Wiltshire Primary Healthcare Trust can't afford the frontal lobotamy and 4 rolls of double-thickness rubber wallpaper that he so desparately needs, they certainly can't afford thioridazine.

Four things:

Thing #1) Congratulations on a post with only ONE word spelled incorrectly ("stvei").

Thing #2) None of my words were "made up".

Thing #3) I reserve the right, so well explained by Lewis Carroll, to use words in the fashion that suits me. See below.

"When I use a word," Humpty Dumpty said, in a rather scornful tone, "it means just what I choose it to mean--neither more nor less."

"The question is," said Alice, "whether you can make words mean so many different things."

"The question is," said Humpty Dumpty," which is to be master--that's all."

---Lewis Carroll, Through the Looking-Glass

Thing #4) I don't give a rats ass whether Steve approves of my words, or doesn't approve.

Thing #5) (I know I said "Four things", but this is a bonus just for you.) I damned sure don't give a rats ass whether YOU approve of my use of words. In fact, I view your dis-approval as a positive endorsement of my choice of words.

With kindest warm wishes of the season,

de Hans, K0HB

Nowhere did I "forge" a nickname or screen name, Brain.

Yes, I poked fun at Markie in the attributes line, but neither you nor he can provide a single "forged" post. Not one RRAP post has been generated by me that misrepresented the author by screen name or e mail address. I don't use anonymous remailers nor do I create bogus accounts for the purpose of anonyminity.

You're welcome to try and find one, but you'll only wind up chasing your already pitiful little tail.

> You're simply wrong far more often than you care to admit, but it goes

No, Brain, YOU are. You wish to create some veil of innocence that you can wrap yourself in all-the-while accusing others (OK...Just me...) of doing "despicable" things.

You have some serious deficits of your own to deal with, but seemingly can't come to grips with them so everyone else gets to "deal" with them.

So..."ARES"..."Unlicensed Devices"..."Somalia authorization"..."diminutives"...

Care to answer any of those?

Bad Brain.

Nope.

Unless you can provide some documentation where I've ever prevented you from attending the services of your choice, denied you access to materials with which to practice your faith, or otherwise impeded your access to those resources.

Calling you "PaganBoy" is none of those.

> > > then you are stupid but we knew that
> > >

> we did BB, frank, len, and I know dave and you are stupid

Lessee....

You're a proven (and admitted) pathological liar with a penchant for theft, alcoholism, and a whole long list of acts of deceit and misconduct.

"BB" has a laundry-list of unanswerd questions about statements he's made over the last 6 years, most of which include dishonest or intentionally deceitful comments he's made. Many of those were so ludicrous and stupid on the face of them, then made even MORE ludicrous by his attempts to "defend" them. "Somalia", "ARES", "unlicensed devices", "MARS", etc etc etc...

"frank" is a disgraced, twice court martialed ex-Marine who claims to be buddies with Oliver North and has "resources you can't even begin to understand", but can't seem to verify public let alone privileged USMC information. In other words, he's been caught lying. He's admitted some of his errors in this very forum. I only give him small "slack" for having owned up to his court martials, but he's still liar and a coward.

And "len"...Len's been caught lying more times than YOU have, and that's no small feat. Lennie has lied about individuals in this group, lied about conditions of his Army service, lied about radio policies and, well, just lied.

So....Let me add this up: Zero (Mark's opinion) plus Zero ("BB's opinion) plus Zero ("frank's" opinion") plus Zero ("len's" opinion) equals....ZERO! Multiply that by Todd's opinion and we have Zero to the Zero power!

Refer to Michigan's "Kevin's Law".

You've uttered a death threat in a public forum. Several times, actually.

(a) Operation under the provisions of this section is limited to frequency hopping and digitally modulated intentional radiators that comply with the following provisions:
(1) Frequency hopping systems shall have hopping channel carrier frequencies separated by a minimum of 25 kHz or the 20 dB bandwidth of the hopping channel, whichever is greater. The system shall hop to channel frequencies that are selected at the system hopping rate from a pseudorandomly ordered list of hopping frequencies. Each frequency must be used equally on the average by each transmitter. The system receivers shall have input bandwidths that match the hopping channel bandwidths of their corresponding transmitters and shall shift frequencies in synchronization with the transmitted signals.

(i) For frequency hopping systems operating in the 902-928 MHz band:
if the 20 dB bandwidth of the hopping channel is less than 250 kHz, the system shall use at least 50 hopping frequencies and the average time of occupancy on any frequency shall not be greater than 0.4 seconds within a 20 second period; if the 20 dB bandwidth of the hopping channel is 250 kHz or greater, the system shall use at least 25 hopping frequencies and the average time of occupancy on any frequency shall not be greater than

0.4 seconds within a 10 second period. The maximum allowed 20 dB bandwidth of the hopping channel is 500 kHz.
(ii) Frequency hopping systems operating in the 5725-5850 MHz band shall use at least 75 hopping frequencies. The maximum 20 dB bandwidth of the hopping channel is 1 MHz. The average time of occupancy on any frequency shall not be greater than 0.4 seconds within a 30 second period.
(iii) Frequency hopping systems in the 2400-2483.5 MHz band shall use at least 15 non-overlapping channels. The average time of occupancy on any channel shall not be greater than 0.4 seconds within a period of 0.4 seconds multiplied by the number of hopping channels employed. Frequency hopping systems which use fewer than 75 hopping frequencies may employ intelligent hopping techniques to avoid interference to other transmissions. Frequency hopping systems may avoid or suppress transmissions on a particular hopping frequency provided that a minimum of 15 non-overlapping channels are used.

(2) Systems using digital modulation techniques may operate in the 902-928 MHz, 2400-2483.5 MHz, and 5725-5850 MHz bands. The minimum 6 dB bandwidth shall be at least 500 kHz.

(b) The maximum peak output power of the intentional radiator shall not exceed the following:

(1) For frequency hopping systems in the 2400-2483.5 MHz band employing at least 75 hopping channels, and all frequency hopping systems in the 5725-5850 MHz band: 1 Watt. For all other frequency hopping systems in the 2400-2483.5 band: 0.125 Watt.
(2) For frequency hopping systems operating in the 902-928 MHz band:
1 watt for systems employing at least 50 hopping channels; and, 0.25 watts for systems employing less than 50 hopping channels, but at least 25 hopping channels, as permitted under paragraph (a)(1)(i) of this section.

(3) For systems using digital modulation in the 902-928 MHz, 2400-2483.5 MHz, and 5725-5850 MHz bands: 1 Watt.
(4) Except as shown in paragraphs (b)(3) (i), (ii) and (iii) of this section, if transmitting antennas of directional gain greater than 6 dBi are used the peak output power from the intentional radiator shall be reduced below the stated values in paragraphs (b)(1) or (b)(2) of this section, as appropriate, by the amount in dB that the directional gain of the antenna exceeds 6 dBi.

(i) Systems operating in the 2400-2483.5 MHz band that are used exclusively for fixed, point-to-point operations may employ transmitting antennas with directional gain greater than 6 dBi provided the maximum peak output power of the intentional radiator is reduced by 1 dB for every 3 dB that the directional gain of the antenna exceeds 6 dBi.
(ii) Systems operating in the 5725-5850 MHz band that are used exclusively for fixed, point-to-point operations may employ transmitting antennas with directional gain greater than 6 dBi without any corresponding reduction in transmitter peak output power.
(iii) Fixed, point-to-point operation, as used in paragraphs (b)(3)(i) and (b)(3)(ii) of this section, excludes the use of point-to-multipoint systems, omnidirectional applications, and multiple co-located intentional radiators transmitting the same information. The operator of the spread spectrum intentional radiator or, if the equipment is professionally installed, the installer is responsible for ensuring that the system is used exclusively for fixed, point-to-point operations. The instruction manual furnished with the intentional radiator shall contain language in the installation instructions informing the operator and the installer of this responsibility.

(5) Systems operating under the provisions of this section shall be operated in a manner that ensures that the public is not exposed to radio frequency energy levels in excess of the Commission's guidelines.

See Sec. 1.1307(b)(1) of this chapter.
(c) In any 100 kHz bandwidth outside the frequency band in which the spread spectrum or digitally modulated intentional radiator is operating, the radio frequency power that is produced by the intentional radiator shall be at least 20 dB below that in the 100 kHz bandwidth within the band that contains the highest level of the desired power, based on either an RF conducted or a radiated measurement. Attenuation below the general limits specified in Sec. 15.209(a) is not required. In addition, radiated emissions which fall in the restricted bands, as defined in Sec. 15.205(a), must also comply with the radiated emission limits specified in Sec. 15.209(a) (see Sec. 15.205(c)).

(d) For digitally modulated systems, the peak power spectral density conducted from the intentional radiator to the antenna shall not be greater than 8

dBm in any 3 kHz band during any time interval of continuous transmission.
(e) [Reserved]
(f) For the purposes of this section, hybrid systems are those that employ a combination of both frequency hopping and digital modulation techniques. The frequency hopping operation of the hybrid system, with the direct sequence or digital modulation operation turned off, shall have an average time of occupancy on any frequency not to exceed 0.4 seconds within a time period in seconds equal to the number of hopping frequencies employed multiplied by 0.4. The digital modulation operation of the hybrid system, with the frequency hopping operation turned off, shall comply with the power density requirements of paragraph (d) of this section.

(g) Frequency hopping spread spectrum systems are not required to employ all available hopping channels during each transmission. However, the system, consisting of both the transmitter and the receiver, must be designed to comply with all of the regulations in this section should the transmitter be presented with a continuous data (or information) stream. In addition, a system employing short transmission bursts must comply with the definition of a frequency hopping system and must distribute its transmissions over the minimum number of hopping channels specified in this section.
(h) The incorporation of intelligence within a frequency hopping spread spectrum system that permits the system to recognize other users

within the spectrum band so that it individually and independently chooses and adapts its hopsets to avoid hopping on occupied channels is permitted. The coordination of frequency hopping systems in any other manner for the express purpose of avoiding the simultaneous occupancy of individual hopping frequencies by multiple transmitters is not permitted.

Note: Spread spectrum systems are sharing these bands on a noninterference basis with systems supporting critical Government requirements that have been allocated the usage of these bands, secondary only to ISM equipment operated under the provisions of part 18 of this chapter. Many of these Government systems are airborne radiolocation systems that emit a high EIRP which can cause interference to other users. Also, investigations of the effect of spread spectrum interference to U. S. Government operations in the 902-928 MHz band may require a future decrease in the power limits allowed for spread spectrum operation.

Hmmmm? "raped an old friend" is proof that you perpetrate forgeries.
I think that's precisely the assinine stunt you pulled that set Mark

I think an apology is in order.

I'll have to amend what I said on the PRC-104. Hughes Aircraft Ground Systems got the initial development contract for it from the USMC some time between 1975 and 1977; seems there was a bit of disagreement between a couple of ex-HAC people who worked on it south of here as to exact year. :-)

The Army got into the act on seeing field performance of the first USMC ones and they wanted one, too. :-) Army changed a few things (not much) and - probably - they added the "IHFR" moniker to the series ("Improved High Frequency Radio")...which meant an "A" suffix to the original PRC-104 and its R/T unit (RT-1209). Not to be outdone, the USMC wanted some changes after that with a resulting "B" suffix. :-)

USMC had them first in the latter half of the 1970s, Army got theirs in the first half of the 1980s. :-)

Somewhere in the era between 1977 and 1985, Hughes incorporated a microprocessor in the synthesizer. One result was the change from a single push button per digit with mechanical display to an LCD screen with rubber-sealed push buttons on frequency control of the R/T. That, plus some more minor revisions inside resulted in a re-issue of TMs in 1985 - 1986. Same basic R/T that is a full SSB receiver plus Tx exciter (the 20 W PEP Amp is in the automtic tuning unit alongside the manpack, higher power Amp and auto antenna tune in the vehicular or "ground" version (GRC-193).

I tried to find a better description of the MRC-138 but could not.
Maybe that was the Marines' own version of the GRC-193? Either way, it was described as selectable 100 W or 400 W PEP on HF.
Note: A lot of "MRC-" radios out there but all for Marines;
I find no direct Army "MRC-"s described.

Given a mere 64 years since we got into WW2 until now, there's a whole potfull of different radios, radar sets, transponders, gizmos that have gotten the U.S. military nomenclature. A few of those were civilian developments, bought intact, and given MIL monikers (AN/FRC-93 for the Collins KWM-2 all-band HF transceiver; AN/FRC-23 and FRC-35 for a GE microwave terminal).
I'm glad I "took notes" with my camera during my 4 active years just to jog the memory much later; came easy enough with visual clues to pull out certain technical details. :-)

Probably from the old BC-603 and BC-604 "tank radios." [add 80 to the numbers for corresponding non-tank radios] Those were all-tube, FM, and definitely crystal-controlled using 1 to 10 FT-241 holder crystals with "channel numbers" on them plus the air frequency (highest end of HF). Those just selected the crystal and cam-operated a couple variable capacitors. Those "tank radios" were among the first to get their nomenclature changed to "AN/VRC-" in the last year of WW2.

The sensitivity is due - according to a PhD in Optics I worked under at Rocketdyne - an innovative expansion of the basic photomultiplier tube still used for light level measurements down to single photon level. The difference with the NOD is that it does it as a wavefront of EM light as opposed to the "stages" of the photomultiplier tube with a small target area.
That requires the higher voltages from the internal battery supply. Sensitivity is best at IR due to less wavefront energy there, thus the photon multiplication has higher gain at IR.

Weird science! First time I looked through one at EOS in Pasadena (test area completely enclosed in double black plastic sheet), the "illumination" came from a guy's radium-marked wristwatch dial! "Eye opening" experience! :-)

If I carefully re-arrange those words, I get the impression that you want to convey the thought that once the military uses a word (like "jeep" for G P), then all civilian use of the word in not allowed?

That's a large a lie as I've ever witnessed here on rrap, right up there with "I was a Colonel in the Chemical Corps".

BTW, what is a "ve chile" anyhow? Is that a Canadian person under the age of 6?

By the way, I'm still looking for a good jeep-style amateur radio logging program. Do you have any nominations?

"an old friend" <kb9rqz@yahoo.com> wrote

> what proof?

Proof? You want proof? I'm right, and you're wrong, and I can provide the mathematical proof.

It is obvious, even to you, that the opposite of right is left and that three lefts
make a right or 3l = r.

It is also clear that wrong is the opposite of right so -w = r.

So this would make 3l = r = -w which means that 3l = -w. Now, since left is the opposite of right (-l = r) this would mean l = r = -w, which playing with the math gives me l = -r = w and so left is the same as wrong (yes, I could have done this in fewer steps, but I didn't feel like doing that).

Now, since l = w and 3l = r that would make 3w = r. This means that three wrongs make a right. Of course, since 3 is an odd number, this situation doesn't work out with any values for r and w except 0 which would mean that r = 0 and w = 0 and l = 0, although the last one I don't really care about.

This means that right and wrong are mathematically identical and so classifying things as right or wrong is pointless because both of them are the same. And since there is no difference between right and wrong, that would make ME always right and YOU always wrong and isn't that the thing that rrap is all about?

2 + 2 = 8 if you assign sufficiently large values to 2.

Warmest personal wishes for the holiday,

Sure, no problem. The math is elementary.

Db = 10 log x P2/P1, which works out in round numbers that a 10 times gain in power = 10db, and a 2 times gain in power = 3 db.

So 50W raised 10db = 500w

500W raised another 3db = 1,000

Total gain (from 50W to 1000W) = 13db

An S-unit is generally considered to be 6db.

Two S-units = 12db

13db is just a bit over 2 S-units.

A kilowatt is only about 2 S-units stronger than 50W, assuming equivalent antenna systems.

However, if you're using a 1,500W amplifier and a 0db-gain vertical , and I'm using a 50W transmitter with 16db gain directional antenna, all other things being equal, my 50W will be LOUDER than your 1,500W at a distant receiver.

Do the math.

Hans, I don't know how familiar you are with today's testing but this material is not covered on the Technician test. It doesn't get addressed until the General test. I happen to know this because sometimes I teach classes sponsored by our club. It's unfortunate that this is not covered. I've often had to address it in the Technician class though as there is typically one in each class who thinks that he should run out and buy an amplifier as soon as they get licensed.

If you increase your transmitter output power from 5 watts to 10 watts, what decibel (dB) increase does that represent?
A. 2 dB

No, you didn't because it's not funny. Not even a little bit. You may have thought it was funny, but no one else does.

I stand corrected. However, I can't find the equation to allow the Tech candidate to actually calculate this in the Now You're Talking Technician study guide so it boils down to rote memorization. Not a very good way to really understand the meaning. The equation and how to use it is covered in the General study guide. So that's how I came to the impression that it wasn't on the test. Sorry about that.

they are welcome to peruse two texts by Hugh G. J. Aitken,
"Syntony and Spark," "The Continuous Wave, Technology and American Radio 1900-1932, Princeton University Press.

For those who wish to review Thomas H. White's history of USA radio, go to http://earlyradiohistory.us/ or find a much-more abbreviated history at the FCC website.

There are many others of the non-amateur histories, but you just don't want to hear of those, do you? :-(

>So go ahead.

For what purpose? I'm not a "radio evangelist" out trying

Jimmie, U.S. radio amateurs were BANISHED from the "long waves" after WW1 and had to be on the "short waves" from 200 meter wavelengths and down. BANISHMENT is banishment.
U.S. radio amateurs have NEVER been granted any band allocations below MF since the FCC was created in 1934.

BTW, you are free to use the CORRECT term of decades in the EM spectrum that others use; i.e., HF, VHF, UHF, etc.

TODAY's use of "shortwave" refers to the high microwave region, usually above 10 GHz. Very short wavelengths indeed.

1923 was 82 years ago, Jimmie.

This is the year 2005. Do try to keep up.

Using ENTIRELY MY RESOURCES, Jimmie. Paid for out of my own

I've used others' brake, mill, and lathes, exhanging services of mine for their loan of tools. All the rest were mine,

I am accurate. I'm am quite QUALIFIED to not only operate a radio transmitter (or any RF emitter), but to design it, build a prototype, test it, align it, make it work.

I am not AUTHORIZED to USE it on frequencies which are regulated by an AUTHORIZING AGENCY. In this case, the agency is the FCC.

The amateur Condor Net operates ON the "220" band, Jimmie, not above it.

I have LEGALLY OPERATED on non-amateur bands both above and below the amateur "220" band since 1952.

Tsk, tsk, tsk, Mr.-I'm-an-amateur-for-38-years, the FCC, which is NOT requiring any commissioners or staff to be

IN RADIO OPERATION for 38 years. :-)

>Depends on which "communications circuits" you mean.

The Defense Communications System, and all its predecessors since WW2 days, Jimmie. "Communications" is not restricted to manual radiotelegraphy.

On the average, Washington Army Radio (WAR) relayed a MILLION teletypewriter messages per MONTH out of Fort Detrick, MD, in 1955. Some of those were the 220 thousand TTY messages relayed by station ADA in Tokyo of that same year. ADA did not communicate directly, RUAP to RUEP, but communicated to Anchorage, Seattle, San Francisco, Honolulu, Manila, Okinawa, Seoul, Pusan, and Saigon in 1955. Some USAF, USN messages were relayed through ADA, along with State Department messages to Manila. A few, but very few facsimiles were relayed, mostly for the USAF. Manila had a circuit through Asmara, Eritrea, to the USAEUR (U.S. Army in Europe).

> You
>always seem to spin away from "communications circuits"
>like those used by the US Navy...

I'm not "spinning" anything, Jimmie. TTY messaging carried the overwhelming mass of ALL messages involving the United States military a half century ago. Insofar as encrypted messages are concerned, TTY carried very nearly ALL of those. "DATA" modes now carry the overwhelming mass of messaging that goes on now...even in the United States Navy.

>> NOT necessary in relaying tens or hundreds of thousands of

No argument about it...teletypewriter mode was the overwhelming medium/mode of messaging a half century ago in the United States military.

No "spin." That's just the way it is.

You will not accept reality since you are a devout desciple of the Church of St. Hiram, a "True Believer" in the mythologic efficacy of morsemanship in radio.

>> Even
>> then that myth is not universal nor does it represent any

>But you have no such license, yet you keep trying to force others to

What "force," Jimmie?

I am simply showing the TRUTH of the reality of communications modes in the REALITY of the radio world.

The FCC gives you the OPTION of using any allocated mode, any amateur band. One of those OPTIONAL modes is morse code on-off keying. NO ONE is "taking that away from you" when the morse code test is removed from amateur licensing regulations.

You will continue to be FREE to use any OPTIONAL communications mode INSIDE your amateur frequency allocations. The "force" that you imagine others try to put on you will remain, well, just imaginary.

>You also haven't been a radio amateur at all.

Neither has any staffer or commissioner at the FCC...and they can, not only tell YOU what to do in amateur radio, but they can also FORCE you to do things (or not do them) via the U.S.
federal marshalls and federal court system.

I personally don't think an entry level examination (we can argue as to whether Technician is really an entry level license) ought to contain material on the underlying mathematics. A simple introduction to the terminology and concepts like "a 3db increase doubles the power" seems appropriate to me. At that level, being able to shuffle through the formulae is less important than familiarity with the broad concepts. I can understand that a wolf is dangerous without needing to be able to mathematically calculate the PSI of pressure his rear incisors will exert on my buttocks if he catches me.

Well I can't say it is a good thing or not. I was just noting that it is not really covered. To me it is far harder to memorize a meaningless phrase like "a 3db increase doubles the power" than to learn the concept and the equation that goes with it. If I learn the concept, then I know why I should remember it. But everyone learns differntly.

I just find it exceedingly difficult to learn lists of things when I don't know what is behind them. For example, memorizing band limits drove me up the wall. There is no rhyme or reason to them. They are simply divisions chosen to be used as awards for upgrading. One of the reasons I went to Extra was that it was far easier to remember the band limits on a day to day operating basis than for any of the other licenses. On the other hand, the equations (and how to use them) was a piece of cake.

Sure does, doesn't it...?!?!

Guess Markie shouldn't have made allusions to forceful sex in the past.

Guess what "sex by force" is, Brain...?!?!?

Not to be "judgeing" one by the degrees they claim to hold, but if Toad were to go to barber college and take the test twice and pass both times, wouldn't that make him twice the barber he was before?
Could we then call Toad 2Test, also?
Likewise for the malcontent sociopath Amateur Radio Operator (2Test) who has had to take his Ham test twice. Doesn't that make the Ham in question twice the operator he was before Riley 'invited' him to retest?

Heck, by extrapolation and a looooooong stretch of the imagination, according to 2Test this should be so.

Uhhhh...noooo...You CLAIMED 28 lies, Brain.

You never were able to substantiate a single one of them. You were

Uh huh...As do RN's at the Associate, Bacalaureate, and Master's Degree'd levels...Unless they want to be charged with patient neglect.
I even know EMT's and Paramedics that have had to do it. Even MD's in residency have gotten tasked to perform this less-than-glorious task.

Not fun, but certainly a part of the job.

Do you suggest that patient's be allowed to lay in thier own

Well, I checked the logs and it seems that there's a lot of activity

There was an email message from you in my inbox this morning.

It was deleted unread.

I do not accept email messages arising from NG discourse. If you have an issue arising from matters in this NG, then this NG is the place to discuss it, all open and above board.

The only reason for having the email account is because it is a requirement of google groups. The mailbox does not get accessed for days at a time.

If you wish to be for ever perceived to be a Childish Broadcaster then carry on, as you do below, with your Childish Broadcasting (CB).

Not only is it unprofessional but it is also a criminal act for

In case their are those who get a CB-type rig such as the 817 in their stockings and are misled by those-who-ought-to-know-better into thinking that they are Radio Hams, the weekly (and revised) FAQ is posted a couple of days early to enable the parents to take the CB gear back to the shop.....

What is Ham Radio?

Ham Radio is a technical pursuit for those who are interested in the science of radio wave
propagation and who are also interested in the way that their radios function. It has a long-standing tradition of providing a source of engineers who
are born naturals.

Ham Radio awakens in its aficionados a whole-life
fascination with all things technical and gives
an all-abiding curiosity to improve one's scientific knowledge. It's a great swimming pool, please dive in!

This excitement causes a wish to share the experience
with ones fellow man, and shows itself in the gentlemanly traditions of Ham Radio.

Radio Hams are in a unique privileged position in that they can construct and operate their own equipment! No-one else has this privilege. Users, such as broadcasters,
the po lice and armed farces, CBers and mobile phone users have to purchase ready-made gear. Manufacturers
are not licensed to operate their gear. Radio Hams
are qualified to design, build and then operate their own pieces of equipment. They do this
with gusto, and also repair and modify their own equipment. This is a privilege well worth the effort
to gain, and one to be jealously guarded.

The excitement that drives a Radio Ham starts with relatively simple technologies at first, perhaps making
his own Wimshurst machine and primary cells. Small pieces
of test equipment follow, possibly multimeters and signal generators. Then comes receivers and transmitters. It is with the latter that communication with like-minded technically motivated people takes off. The scope for technical development grows with the years
and now encompasses DSP and DDS. There is also a great deal of excitement in the areas of computer programming to

be learnt and applied.

The technical excitement motivates Radio Hams to compete
with each other to determine who has designed and manufactured
the best-quality station. This competitiveness is found in DXing, competitions and fox-hunts.

-----OOOOO----

However, beware! A Ham Radio licence is such a desirable thing to have that there are large numbers of people who wish to be thought of
as Radio Hams when, in fact, they are nothing of the kind! Usually such people are a variation of the CB Radio hobbyist; they buy their radios off the shelf and send them back to be repaired; they are not interested in technical discussion
and sneer at those who are; they have no idea how
their radios work inside and have no wish to find out;
they are free with rather silly personal insults;
they have not satisfied any technical qualification
and their licences prevent the use of
self-designed-and-built equipment.

These CB types engage in the competitive activities
with their Cheque-Book-purchased off-the-shelf radios
in a forlorn effort to prove that they are Radio Hams.

No _REAL_ Radio Hams are deceived by such people!

-----ooooo-----

One such CB type is the so-called "Not-Ham". Otherwise known as the CBer-Masquerading-As-A-Radio-Ham, this type
had their background in the hobby that is CB Radio and not in the technical pursuits that lead up to a coveted Ham licence.
Easily recognised by their boasts of the criminal activity of 11 metre SSB operation, one wonders why they don't go back to the CB Bands if such bands are dearer in their hearts than are the Ham Bands? No _REAL Radio Hams associate with those who made an illegal installation of transmitting equipment before being
in possession of an appropriate licence.

-----ooooo-----

One infallible way to disambiguate the CB Radio Hobbyist
from the _REAL_ Radio Ham is to solicit their view of the difference between CB Radio and Ham Radio. A Radio Ham will perceive Ham Radio to be a technical pursuit and will perceive CB Radio to be a social communications facility
no different in essence to a land-line telephone or a

could also hold a CB licence safe in the knowledge that such a licence says no more about him than having a land-line telephone, whilst continuing to regard Ham Radio as a separate technical pursuit.

A CB Radio hobbyist, on the other hand, sees no difference between a Ham Radio licence and a CB Radio licence. To him, they are sisters-under-the-skin. Wrongly, the CB Radio Hobbyist then tries to classify himself as the equal of the Radio Ham when, in fact, he is nothing of the kind. A sure sign of a CB Radio hobbyist is if he holds, or has ever held, a licence issued under the gangrenous degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme.

-----ooooo-----

One group of people who claim to be of the standard of Radio Hams but who are in reality nothing more than an apology for the failure of a CBer are those class B licensees who falsely proclaimed that they were against the use of a Morse Test to control access to the HF bands, until, that is, a test was introduced at their intellectual level, the intellectual level of 6-year-olds.

6 year-olds simply lack the mathematical tool kit to enable them to handle even the simplest algebraic manipulation for Ohm's Law and thus, the disgraceful Class Ber's in the aforementioned category are not Radio Hams by any stretch of the imagination!

Remember - A sure sign of a CB Radio hobbyist is if he holds, or has ever held, a licence issued under the gangrenous degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme!

If you wish to be henceforth perceived as a Childish Broadcaster (CBer) then carry right on with the Childish Broadcasting (CB) such as you utter below.

You seem to be obsessed with me, you are chanting your infantile playground tirades at every turn. Brian Reay says that such obsession is a sign of envy. Have you no life of your own?

All _REAL_ Radio Hams have a number of ongoing projects simultaneously. Some are held up for lack of components, some for a lack of time, others for lack of info.
I wouldn't recommend anyone whose background is in transistorised QRP to tackle the neutralising of a compact PA stage with 600 VDC on the anodes after replacing the antenna coupling capacitor unadvisedly, lightly, or wantonly. The project was held up awaiting info, and when I needed the space, was one of a number that I disposed of. ISTR that an R1475 awaiting restoration
also was disposed of at the same time. The project was underway, I was fully prepared to have a go, in sharp contrast to the CBers-Masquerading-As-Radio-Hams of today who buy their goods from a shop and return them to a shop if needing repair.

You really do seem anxious to score some pathetic and childish points. You may feel at home starting and then desperately trying to continue a pissing-in-the-playground competition, but that is not my style.

You do yourself, this NG, and Ham Radio in general no service by discouraging the discussion of what we do and the problems we encounter along the way if you pick up on minor points out of context and sneer and chant from the sidelines. How are we to encourage the novitiate other than by discussing what we do?

Shame on you.

Grow up, Mike Gathergood!

I don't follow web links - if you have something valid to contribute to a discussion in this NG - possibly your address and telephone number, then contribute it, or else be for ever dismissed as a cowardly child.

You really must get out of this habit of yours of chanting infantile untruths; it does you no favours.
I did not accuse anybody of being a pirate as you imply below.

As to using one's own name, I used to until my family was subject to malicious and threatening correspondence coming from Stephen G Bryan G0SGB.
I advise anybody to remain anonymous as there are malicious and obsessive loonies to be found in this NG and in this thread to this day.

You also seem to not understand the tradition discussed above - I do not claim to be a font of any sort;

I am merely using a pseudonym.

Once again, you should give serious consideration to presenting to this NG a persona other than the insult-sneering infant that you continue to do below.

It's interesting to note that the author makes much of the repair issue in his so-called 'FAQ', where he says:

"Usually such people are a variation of the CB Radio hobbyist; they buy their radios off the shelf and send them back to be repaired" and also goes on to say, referring to his vision of 'radio hams' (whatever they are):

"They do this with gusto, and also repair and modify their own equipment"

but elsewhere said

"I wouldn't recommend anyone whose background is in transistorised QRP to tackle the neutralising of a compact PA stage with 600 VDC on the anodes after replacing the antenna coupling capacitor "

Is there is a conflict here between the so-called 'FAQ' as laid down, and its practice as suggested by its own adherent? Under what circumstances should others 'repair with gusto' but not consider adjustments to a valve PA? All PAs? Ones with 12V on the anode? What are the limitations here? Is there a safety issue here? Where does one go to get 'a suitable background'? The so-called 'FAQ' should make things clear, not have the issues clouded by postings elsewhere.

But it doesn't stop here. Note that no licence is necessary for the repair of radios, as anyone who wishes can repair them. Neither does the possession of an Amateur Licence bestow a qualification for this activity; it is not specifically mentioned.

But further to the repair issue; the so-called 'FAQ', as noted above, states

"Usually such people are a variation of the CB Radio hobbyist; they buy their radios off the shelf and send them back to be repaired"

but it is apparently a sanctioned activity to have a non-functioning radio, and sell it off in that state, the 'redeeming' factors being that the owner was prepared to repair it, and was intending to repair it; the fact that he did not do so apparently being irrelevant.

So, under this so-called 'FAQ', anyone whose radio ceased to function, but who thought they might have a go at repairing it, and indeed intended to repair it, but in the end didn't for whatever reason ("I can't find a screwdriver to get the lid off") would not have negated their 'qualification' for inclusion in the strange but very limited sect proposed by the so-called 'FAQ'! A mere 'statement of intent', perhaps made years later, will be all that is required to save their bacon!

It would seem that this issue of 'repair' needs to be clarified within the so-called 'FAQ' itself, rather than by passing defensive remarks in other utterances; and to do this as a matter of urgency as there might be safety issues for anyone so encouraged to follow it. Also, it makes the so-called 'FAQ' difficult to follow for its adherents - should there be any - in much the same way that over the years 'operating' has been at various times both held high and then damned.

It would seem that this so-called 'FAQ' is itself in need of serious repair; let us see if the author can tackle that, or whether he merely intends to tackle it but then abandon it in favour of some activity that actually lies within his ambit. It is suggested that for a number of reasons, some possibly legal in scope, he does not republish it until the problems inherent in it are satisfactorily dealt with, otherwise serious issues might arise by any who follow it.

Plus, of course, such a neutralisation isn't that difficult a task- being a normal process after replacing a valve. I've done a couple of FT101's over the years and I don't recall the PA being that compact.

Either way, assuming the technician involved had even a modicum of experience in electronics, it is the sort of job I'd expect them to be able to tackle.

But why would he allow "nugatories" (his word) such as truth and common-sense to spoil his vision of amateur radio? A vision which, according to this posting from 1999, included an HND-level exam!

One wonders what would be the point? If 136kHz, 1.8, 3.5, 5, 7, 10, 18, 21 and 24MHz were only available to qualified engineers, what would they use them for? What could they learn about propagation on these bands that we don't already know? And, in a world where mission-critical long-distance comms has already moved to fibre and satellite, to what use would any new knowledge be put?

Surely it's better to promote the social side of the hobby (and yes Gareth, it IS a hobby) to at least the same extent as the technical side, and the only way to do this is for entry into the hobby to remain "competitive" with other pastimes. The RSGB have shown that they can do this efficiently.

The wolf analogy doesn't seem to me to be quite valid in this context. I would liken being able to calculate the decibels to be more similar to having the ability to identify the wolf as a wolf rather than a dog or a pig or a sheep and knowing the degree of danger that each may or may not present.

The power equation is a simple equation that can be run on any calculator that has more than the basic four functions. The user can simply punch it in and get the answer.

Here we have an entry level license that is allowed full power at the VHF/UHF frequencies. Yet the licensee is not expected to learn the associated terminology and concepts. That seems rather inappropriate to me, particularly in light of the argument that some people make that privileges should be tied directly to material that is tested. To correct that situation, would require either increasing the level of material covered on the Tech test or decreasing the power levels allowable to Techs. Either one would go over like a lead balloon.

Besides as someone has commented before, it is far more difficult to determine if an operator is violating the power limits than it is the frequency limits for their license. You can't really measure the power of a station from halfway across the country. As we've both seen, we've each worked QRPers that were pegging the needle and "killer watters" that were barely a whisper all due to propagation conditions. So additional spectrum makes the most sense from the perspective of ease of enforcement even though it may not be related to the material being studied.

The "simple" introduction also leads people to false conclusions as without studying the equation and understanding how to use it, any reasonable person will assume that the effect is linear. Although this particular mistake would be relatively harmless.

In every Tech class that I've taught, at least one person gets really excited when they find out that they can legally run 1500 watts and wants to know what are the best amps and where to buy them. So I end up drawing a sketch of a signal strength meter and showing them the difference in the meter reading. Often they are disappointed that the results are relatively small. So then I end up going through an explanation of when and why an amp will help and discussing gain antennas versus amps to get the higher signal strength. We end up covering more than is on the test. But that's a good thing. I'm glad that the students are curious, involved participants as that means that they will learn better and remember longer. I must admit though that when it comes to really digging into it, I have to tell them we'll cover it in the General class simply due to lack of time. However, their interest has been sufficiently engaged that they are the ones who come to the General class.

Presumably this is the level of attainment that he himself reached;
had he set it higher, he would have excluded himself!

But it is the so-called 'FAQ' that raises the greatest concern, for he has now started to bound it with other advice - not written within the so-called FAQ, but elsewhere. If this was done as part of a professional's duties, it would be regarded as, well, unprofessional; but in the context of encouraging newcomers, it is a dangerous and disgraceful practice.

Should this so-called FAQ should be ignored by all, and a disclaimer issued by the author? Perhaps an abuse report might be in order if this not be done in the very near future.

Additionally, the band limits change by FCC action for a variety of reasons. On the knowledge of band limits, I believe test applicants would be better informed if they were provided with a band limits chart and then asked specific questions which they could then use the chart to find the correct answer.

Struggling is an insufficient reason. There are people who have to struggle to balance their checkbooks but the bank cuts them no slack when they overdraw their account. They still have to pay the overdraft fee.

Certainly most professions expect the "established" to encourage and support newcomers.
Experienced engineers tend to have newcomers as assistants, qualified teachers have PGCE students to mentor and advise, new police officers are put with experienced officers, junior Doctors are assign to a registrar, etc., etc., etc.

Such a system only fails if the "established" person isn't so "established" as maybe they should be.

I personally don't get the point you're trying to make (hope that doesn't make me a bad person).

The Technician exam "is what it is" based on a rather convoluted set of rule making decisions going all the way back to 1951. By happenstance, it has ended up as the "entry level" license into Amateur radio.

The solution is NOT more tinkering with the Technician license, but rather the establishment of a true entry level "learners permit" similar to the original Novice.

> Either one would go over like a lead balloon.

As well it ought! For at least two reasons.

Reason #1: (Increasing the level of material) The test, as it currently is used, is trying to "stand in" for an entry level examination. Increasing the difficulty would make it even more inappropriate for that purpose.

Reason #2: (Decrease the power levels) While the majority of licensees (of ANY CLASS) may not use the current allowed 1,500W, there is a non-trivial percentage of Technicians who are using the license they were granted in contesting, exotic propagation modes (meteor scatter, tropo, eme, etc.), and other applications which routinely use higher power levels.

Rather than jeremiads against the current Technician situation, there should rather be an effort to convince FCC to institute a NEW entry class "learners permit" similar to the original Novice. I recommend a 50W permit, with access to all bands/modes from DC to daylight, and a 10-year non-renewable grant.

It turned my stomach to try to return to Steve what he dished out to myself and others. That he is able to relentlessly do the things he does indicates to me that he has absolutely no self respect.

Take the high road. He will have the low road all to himself. Let him walk alone in this endeavor.

Maybe a clean CRB check should be a pre-requisite for an amateur radio

I see that some cowardly child has hidden behind an anonymising server to forge an abusive posting that did not come from me.

What more proof do we need that the dumbing down that has come in from, amongst other things, the gangrenous degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence, has done irreparable harm to the society of Radio Hams?

In the light of the forged posting below, it is more and more important that _ALL_ self-respecting _REAL_ Radio Hams resign forthwith from the RSCB, if only to show support for decency and for civilised behaviour in Radio Hammery.

At no time have I indicated that I wasn't prepared to tackle something of which I had no experience. I was prepared to tackle it, and was awaiting the appropriate instructions. How many of those who boast of having neutralised the PA stage of an FT101 did so without the manufacturer's instructions thereto, and if they lacked the instructions, how did they know that their attempts to so neutralise were successful?

You really do seem desperate to score some

Firstly, why not identify yourself, rather than hiding like the infantile coward that you undoubtedly are behind an anonymising server? (Talking of infantile anonymous cowards, have you ever thought about joining the plods yourself?)

Secondly, if anyone is arrested as the result of a malicious and perjurous complaint, then that arrest, and any corresponding bringing of Ham Radio into disrepute, is a reflection on the criminal making the complaint, in this case, Brian Reay, G8OSN/M3OSN, and not on his unfortunate victim.

Brian Reay subjected me to a vicious, malicious and distressing campaign of harassment over a number of years when he repeatedly accused me of sheep-shagging, said that my wife was a sheep in the bed next to me, and accused me of drinking methylated spirit. I did not respond to him other than to chastise him for his grossly offensive behaviour.

When it became apparent that Brian Reay was a schoolteacher, and had been conducting his sexually deviant campaign when he was under training at a girls's school in Dartford, Kent, I responded by suggesting that such a campaign meant that he was a danger to children. Brian Reay's infantile psyche could not deal with having the tables turned on him, and he made a perjurous and malicious complaint to the plods suggesting that it was I who was harassing him, rather than the other way about. Brian Reay is a w*nkmason and it seems that his fellow w*nkmasons in the plods will not take action against him for wasting plod time in the way that he did.

Bullseye!

Gee, he can use a call sign lookup page, I'm really, really scared!

Maybe I should file a report with the Melksham police.

What's more childish, a casual insult across the internet or actually going far enough to get arrested for intimidation across the internet?

I suspect the latter.

Not at all. My point was unclear. I was attempting to point out that it may be silly to try to make the exams address only the privileges that will be earned as a result of that test as some would try to convince the FCC.
You'ld not only have to rework the exam structure but also the alignment of privileges. They are already out of step for the reasons you indicate below and "fixes" would cause a problem.

Exactly. And along the way, the technical requirements to earn it changed when the Tech written was split off from the General written.

Actually I would agree with that to an extent. Any tinkering with the Tech license would worsen the situation. I would however propose closing the Tech license to new issues just as the Novice and Advanced are now closed. However I think creating a new entry level license will be unnecessary. Once the current NPRM is implemented, thereby eliminating the code, we are going to see the Tech numbers drop like a rock. Current Techs will upgrade within a year or two (assuming that they are active enough to hear about it). New Techs will be likely to push right on through and take the General fairly soon after taking the Tech. I really think that,for the most part, only those Technicians who are inactive will not upgrade.

As we move forward, I think we'll see enough people pushing right on through to General that "difficulty" would become a moot point. In the test sessions that I've been involved in, we actively encourage everyone who passes the Tech exam to go ahead and give the General written a try. Those who do try it only miss by a few questions and are so motivated by coming that close that they dive into studying it and pass the General written shortly thereafter. As indicated above, I believe that the Tech should be closed to new issues sometime after the NPRM goes into effect. However, that will require reworking the question pools as the bulk of the RF safety material is covered only on the Technician exam and that would need rolled into a new General exam in that case.

That was exactly my point. It would be inappropriate as they would lose privileges. It seems to me that most hams agree that losing privileges is highly undesireable in reworking the license structure.

It was not intended to be a jermiad against the current Technician licensing situation. If it came across that way, then I did not express myself as well as I had intended.

I do not agree with your new entry license though. It's simply unnecessary in light of the upcoming elimination of the code test.

When I got into amateur radio in 1992, the amount of material that one had to cover to go from Novice to Extra made a five level licensing structure reasonable to allow the candidate to make the journey in manageable size steps. When the code requirement was reduced to 5wpm in 2000, the three license structure made sense as far as step size went. Unfortunately accumulated changes in the Tech license kind of put it out of step with the other licenses as you pointed out. That would have been the time to devise a new entry level license. Implementation of the pending NPRM would make a two license system reasonable.

radio in the US of A.

It's starting to make sense. Jims says the FCC fined some idiot for jamming MARS nets. So although the FCC no longer has regulatory authority over civil radio, they've taken up enforcing military radio and MARS nets. Sheesh!

??????????????????????????

I disagree with you, and I disagree violently. If we were sitting discussing this over a cup of coffee, I'd be yelling at you!

The code test has nothing to do with it.

There currently is no proper entry level "learners permit" to "dip a toe" in the amateur radio waters. Closing the Tech license would be to discard even the makeshift "entry level" we have now! This is an idea which should not be tossed aside lightly. It should be hurled aside with great force.

There needs to be a proper "learners permit", and until that's available closing the Tech license would be suicidal to the amateur service.

Considering your behavior here I sincerely doubt your account of Mr. Reay's actions, especially when you refer to the constabulary as 'the plods,' a strong indication of your own denial of reality. I suspect (there's a word you're used to, eh?) the police reviewed transcripts of your exchanges with Mr. Reay and apparently determined you were the threat, as you were the party taken in to custody.

I agree with Han's position on a "learners license."

I don't believe, however, that any tech (no code tech that is) who is running high power today would not be willing to go for General if the Tech power limit was reduced. I doubt there's anymore than a percentage point or 2 of current techs that operate over 100w. Those that do and are "no code techs" I can't see being upset about a reduced power limit IF the tech license is expanded to allow significant HF access. That's a quid pro quo as opposed to only a loss of privileges which Generals and Advanced saw back when (1968) incentive licensing hit the streets.

You reading this Todd? Obscene cartoon drawings are an illegal form of child pornography. Read the final paragraph below carefully. You just might have a few Federal agents scanning your filthy little bbs after all.

====(begin quote)====

posted on 2005-12-02 10:01:34
source: Richmond Times-Dispatch

In March we reported on a man in Virginia who faced life in prison for, among other things, downloading anime-child pornography on a computer at the Virginia Employment Commission. The downloads occurred while the man was on probation for a previous conviction involving child pornography.

In total he was accused of 20 counts of receiving obscene materials, 20 counts of receiving obscene visual representations of sexual abuse of children, 14 counts of receiving child pornography and 20 counts of sending and receiving obscene e-mails describing sexual abuse of children. Besides the anime-child porn, he was also received digital photographs of children engaged in sexually explicit acts.

Yesterday that man was found guilty, by jury, of 74 counts of child pornography charges in U.S. District Court.

When he is sentenced on March 10, he faces a maximum sentence of 1,160 years in prison and a fine of US$18.5 million.

According to the man was "the first person convicted under a 2003 federal statute that makes obscene cartoon drawings as well as photographs an illegal form of child pornography."

Provisions of the Child Pornography Prevention Act (CPPA), a 1996 law that banned virtual child pornography, were thrown out by the US Supreme Court in 2002 on freedom of speech grounds. However WRIC reports that this individual is the first to be charged under "a new child pornography law that can apply to cartoons." The report did not specify whether this was a federal or state law, however the US Attorney's Office was cited as being involved. If convicted, he could face life in prison.

The plods did not check out any transcripts of mine, and took Brian Reay at his word. I rapidly produced in defence a pile 6 inches thick of Brian Reay's infantile and grossly offensive remarks to me and the plods had to back down. I had no
"exchanges" with Reay - I merely responded in defence against him to chasitise him for his gratuitous offensive onslaughts - not dissimilar from your own.

The trial of the plod Richard Fuller for assault is scheduled to take place on the 8th February at Chippenham Magistrates' Court.

My behaviour here has always been in support of the technical pursuit that is _REAL Ham Radio and trying to maintain standards of decency in response to the outbursts of rather silly and infantile people such as yourself.

Indeed, in respect of your rather silly and infantile behaviour,

Frankly I don't care how you perceive me.

You, on the other hand, seem to be perceived by the others on this group as just that you decry, childish.

> My behaviour here has always been in support of the

Whose standards? Yours? Do those 'standards' involve assisting newcomers, or do you just call them 'childish' and gloat from your soiled, ivory tower?

Oh for pity's sake.

It seems everyone here knows who you are, where you live etc. So why can't you post under your own name and call sign, instead of some fantastically pompous delusion that you're representative of some font of wisdom?

A font of pomposity, yes. Wisdom and knowledge? I'd laugh if you weren't so incredibly pitiful.

Go build something, follow your own FAQ,

Obviously, when you can't even spell "judging" correctly, fatass.

"judging", stupid.

"2Test" isn't a word, DUMBASS. But YOU couldn't pass your freshman year of that 10th rate community college, tubby. Nor can you upgrade for the training wheel technician license. Better stick to the 2 meter repeaters you jam, Davies, you couldn't put a decent antenna for HF in that ghetto HUD apartment you are forced to live in because you fucked up in life so bad the best job you can get is one as a pizza delivery BOY.

> Likewise for the malcontent sociopath Amateur Radio Operator (2Test) who has

It wasn't much of a sanction or punishment either way, eternal no code tech. Roger upgraded from the General he had to retake (quite easily, too; YOU can't even get 5 wpm code, remember, you get stuck after 5 lettters). Looks like the "punishment/sanction" wasn't very effective.

> Heck, by extrapolation and a looooooong stretch of the imagination, according

^^^^^^^^^^^^^

Making up words again, you chronic alcoholic? Go back to delivering those greasy shitty Papa John's pizzas, fatass.

Well, yes and no on that. As of 17 Dec 05, the Technician class license numbers amount to 41.46% of ALL U.S. amateur radio licensees. Both Technician and Technician Plus licensees together make up 48.70% of ALL licensees.

"Closing" the Technician class to new licensees would be as close to an act of outright nastiness on at least 2 out of 5 U.S. radio amateurs. It would be internecine warfare on the hobby!

As of mid-2000, the Technician Plus license class was ALREADY closed to new license grants. See R&O FCC 99-412.

Note also that, as of 17 Dec 05 Hamdata figures, the last 12 months indicated that NEW licensees finally were more than the expirations by 578 or so. The defacto "entry class" has been the no-code-test Technician practically since it was created 14 years ago.

>There currently is no proper entry level "learners permit" to "dip a toe" in the >amateur radio waters.

"Learner's permit?" Are you thinking - still - that "radio" is some kind of craft or mysterious means of communication?
That it MUST be done with a long period of "apprenticeship?"

Radio communication is one button-push "more advanced" than using a telephone. That and learning the jargon of the ham-ways and cutesy old-time phrasing and oh-so-very-important "procedure!" Violate "procedure" and a license grant is taken from the licensee "with great force?!?"

>Closing the Tech license would be to discard even the >makeshift "entry level" we have now!

"Makeshift?!?" Good grief, the no-code-test Technician class >>is<< the defacto "entry class" and has been so for no less than FOURTEEN YEARS! You don't understand that is NO longer "makeshift?"

>There needs to be a proper "learners permit", and until that's available closing >the Tech license would be suicidal to the amateur service.

<ride up gain on "M*A*S*H" theme> ... "Suicide is painless" [lyrics in the original movie theme song] Just take that "black pill" and all worries are gone...

So...are you reverting to olde, olde days of pre-WW2 when
"radio" was still a mysterious "force" with strange, arcane technology that had to be laboriously studied under a "master of the arts?" :-)

"Radio" use - by beginners - is just one push-button "harder" than using a cell phone today. One out of three Americans has a cell phone service subscription. I have yet to come across anyone who has NOT used a conventional telephone for communications purposes and is capable of ordinary speech and hearing.

Oh...the "procedure!" Yes, by all means, make the beginners use CORRECT PROCEDURE! That's "for the good of the service!"
We can't have all those olde-tymers get all upset by some snot-nosed raw beginners NOT using CORRECT PROCEDURE! [what will the CO think? hold "Captain's Mast?" do "Company Punishment?"]

Roger that, super chief. Over. Out. Pbtbthththth...

There's no denial of reality in following the example set by the Oddity Of Ploddity that is the We'll Shite (All Over You) Constabulary....

At 16:45 on the 3rd July 2000, Bobby Young, an Acting Inspector screamed at me, "ANY OLD PLOD WILL NOT DO!".
(Perhaps it is no wonder the childish disposition of the common plod when their leaders behave so badly)

In the evening of 7th March this year, David Hunt W1361 referred to the "common plod".

So.....it seems to me that if it is acceptable for the plods to use the word, "plod" when discussing the plods with members of the public, then it is acceptable for members of the public to use the word, "plod" when discussing the plods, either with the plods, or with people who are not plods.

Not me! RAPE is a damnable act, an act of force against those the rapist wishes to control.

The closest I've ever come to that four-letter word is (long ago) writing that "give a man enough ROPE and he will hang himself."

Give Davie an inch and he thinks he's a ruler...

I don't care what you forever henceforth perceive of me, your authority

Why? With the ease with which the General license will be obtainable, why would anyone want to start with scaled back privileges? I will be very strongly pushing my students to go straight for General. I'm planning on putting together a syllabus over the next few months to be ready for that very contingency.

Why "dip a toe" when you can easily just dive in?

What will the "learner"s permit actually accomplish?

In other words, I believe that the time for a scaled down, entry level license is passing, if not already passed. We're hanging on to yet another outdated idea simply because that is the way some people started.

By the way, this is a fun debate.

But in today's regulatory climate what precisely does a "learner's permit" accomplish? The General is a reasonable level to test for right from the get-go.

"Mail order degree?" <guffaw!> You really are a fucking imbecile.
Obviously, when you can't even spell "judging" correctly, fatass.

"judging", stupid.

"2Test" isn't a word, DUMBASS. But YOU couldn't pass your freshman year of that 10th rate community college, tubby. Nor can you upgrade for the training wheel technician license. Better stick to the 2 meter repeaters you jam, Davies, you couldn't put a decent antenna for HF in that ghetto HUD apartment you are forced to live in because you fucked up in life so bad the best job you can get is one as a pizza delivery
BOY.

> Likewise for the malcontent sociopath Amateur Radio Operator (2Test) who

It wasn't much of a sanction or punishment either way, eternal no code tech. Roger upgraded from the General he had to retake (quite easily, too; YOU can't even get 5 wpm code, remember, you get stuck after 5 lettters). Looks like the "punishment/sanction" wasn't very effective.

> Heck, by extrapolation and a looooooong stretch of the imagination, according
> to 2Test this should be so.
^^^^^^^^^^^^^

Making up words again, you chronic alcoholic? Go back to delivering those greasy shitty Papa John's pizzas, fatass.
^^^^^^^^^^^^^

Typical Roger. Whenever he stumbles across a word he doesn't understand, he accuses the other of "making it up."

I understand perfectly well, Len. The Technician license does not grant any access to HF communications, and Docket 05-235 proposes to keep it that way. At the current time it is possible for Technicians to gain a tiny amount of HF access by the makeshift means of taking a Morse exam. If Docket 05-235 is adopted as written, then even that makeshift access will disappear.

A new entry level class is needed which gives meaningful and useful access to ALL bands, not just UHF/VHF, without requiring passing the General examination.

the anny mouse posts from Aol.com between Jim and steve who is more likely

in addition the annymouse posts then stevie uses to material for an have Todd service cancelled

he also post a post off a blog sent to form staring rom aol.com and then used it as excuse to attack Todd

Mark Morgan, KB9RQZ, has declared himself a country. Morgan, who now goes by the name Zush, says he got the idea from a schizophrenic he met in a mental hospital where he was being treated last October.

Zush's new DXCC country, "Pagan Altered Mental State", consists of one inhabitant -- himself -- and he has issued himself a passport so he can move around. Zush has grudgingly adopted a flag. "I don't need flags and hymns," he says, "but the only way people accept that you have your own country is by using symbols of state. It's purely for diplomatic reasons." He also has changed his amateur radio license to the class "Super Extra" with the vanity callsign PH�NEY.

Zush, has adopted a national religion, "Dyslexic Aethism" with the motto "We don't believe in Dog".

Well, at least you've hosed up the word in an entirely new way. First it was "despictable", now it is "despectable". Both are, of course, incorrect.

The conclusion that since Steve is the only person to use AOL, he has to be posting as some anonymous--except that Steve isn't the only person to use AOL? That's quite some piece of logic you've got going, Mr. Whitman.

the last of th post in your daughter names have gone out from my PC

stevei will surely give a foul typed set of reply all making scatological references, malarke being as scatological as the word shit or feces for that matter, adn I franklym no accept that there is no defference in foulness between More stevie shit and stevie prference more markie malarke. the same reference is made or even if stevie choose the tile More markie Manure, all the same to to me and I will react to it all the same ways as I find it as offenseive

You have to live in a world where society sets the standards. You don't get to do anything you like without penalty.

You are not "doing something exactly in kind". You do have a choice

It isn't your dyslexia which leads me to believe that you aren't in control of faculties. You have far greater issues than dyslexia.

How's that? Did they begin using foul language, start speaking to each other as dead members of the opponent's family. Did they start e-mailing each other hundreds of disjointed messages?

Tell you what, Mark. In about 12 hours, I'm going to start complaining loud and long to each outfit whose facilities you use to post your spam.
I'll forward each of your posts, along with a note which outlines your violations of the TOS of each organization. If you can't get a grip on Constructive suggestion: Gain control over your actions.

For as long as you are prepared to illustrate so graphically
the difference between a CBer, an M3/CB Fools' Licensee, a CBer-Masquerading-As-A-Radio-Ham and a _REAL_ Radio Ham with his gentlemanly traditions, I am prepared to watch you bemusedly from the sidelines and to chastise
you for your ridiculous outbursts.

It is important that we as Radio Hams make a stand for civilised behaviour and decency against the vile CBer,
no matter how he might have slipped into our midst.

Don't you realise how silly and ridiculous you make yourself
look, by indulging in what are essentialy very infantile abusive tirades in an international forum that is broadcast to the whole world?

However, if you wish to be perceived as a Childish Broadcaster (CBer)
then just carry on as you are with your Childish Broadcasting (CB).

You, coming as you do from a background as a ship's radio
"officer", really ought to know better. Shame on you.

You keep posting this, like you've dug up some interesting piece of trivia from an obscure source.

Rather puzzling, since I mentioned it myself last week in response to the thread about the "numbers station" conspiracy theory - and it's on my website www.g4kfk.co.uk

The good news is that I phoned SIPgate's head office in Germany to see what I could learn about your malicious caller. The bad news is that until you stop calling me a stupid boy, I'm not going to tell you what they told me.

For as long as you are prepared to illustrate so graphically
the difference between a CBer, an M3/CB Fools' Licensee, a CBer-Masquerading-As-A-Radio-Ham and a _REAL_ Radio
Ham with his gentlemanly traditions, I am prepared to watch you bemusedly from the sidelines and to chastise
you for your ridiculous outbursts.

It is important that we as Radio Hams make a stand for
civilised behaviour and decency against the vile CBer,
no matter how he might have slipped into our midst.

Don't you realise how silly and ridiculous you make yourself
look, by indulging in what are essentially very infantile
abusive tirades in an international forum that is broadcast to the whole world?

However, if you wish to be perceived as a Childish Broadcaster (CBer)

You, coming as you do from a background as a ship's radio
"officer", really ought to know better. Shame on you.

If you ask that to a few of the Amateurs lurking about in the Newsgroups then the answer from them would be an emphatic yes it does matter, followed by the same old "lowering of standards" and "m3/brain dead cb'ers" "Lazy Asses" etc etc.

That's not from me btw, I take people as I find them, I was simply curious.

Not that obscure to most as it's a web link on your website's home page that you often quote. But then it would be obscure to Pierian Spring who said in this thread:

> I don't follow web links

Or is there was some other really credible explanation, like a lucky guess, divine inspiration, someone else followed the link and told him... or some other dog-ate-my-homework reason?

"taelor_robeson"

This was the one that crossed the line, Mark, and the one that will be second in line (behind your death threats) to Houghton County Sheriff's Office.

I've retained a lawyer in Michigan. It's expensive, but worth it.

I am going to demand that you deliver a complete, unconditional apology via Registered Mail to my home address no later than 27 December 2005. Should you fail to do so, I am prepared to move against you in civil court. I am also prepared to move against you in criminal court. Ignore this as you will, however I am counselled by an Attorney in the State of Michigan that grounds exist and he is willing to file them on my behalf.

Said apology will also appear in RRAP.

That having been said, you are free to do as you wish, but the consequences are yours to bear.

He's got till Monday to decide if he really wants to risk his

He's got decisions to make. Let's see if he can make some lucid

Let me guess: You're the inspiration for the Monty Python character 'Upper Class Twit of the Year'? That's amazing, considering you were about 15 years old when they filmed that skit, you were quite accomplished at such a tender age, my accolades!

If you are the example of a _REAL_ Radio Ham the hobby has definately sunk to a low much lower than I had ever suspected possible.

There's nothing upper class about Gareth.

He's more like another Monty Python character, "The Black Knight" from The Holy Grail. He just keeps coming back for more and more, never knowing when to admit defeat.

The pursuit of decency and of civilised behaviour should never admit defeat in the face of an onslaught by a horde of vulgar and abusive infants.

If we in Radio Hammery retreat in the face of such vulgarity, then the gates will be left open for the Mongolian Hordes.

is all pile of dung. fcc cant change law of physics like gravity or electron mass.

electron mass in f=ma give force to big to be physical. to make wi-fi radio signal electron supposed to vibrate at 2,400,000,000 times each second. that nonsense becaues of f=ma make hop force so big no one have enough power to do it in first place. forget regulations. do what I do and do whatever you want on radio becaues fcc dont know crap anyways.

I am pleased that you tire of your infantile behaviour. There is hope for you, yet. But please remember that it is not just you who is made to look a fool by your behaviour; your behaviour affects the public face of Radio Hammery, and thereby affects us all.

Sleep on, awaken refreshed and hopefully of a more mature perspective than you have presented in your recent posts.

It is rather infantile to seek to impose a rule on others, a rule that you did not follow yourself, for I addressed no remarks to you that would have warranted the nascence
of your infantile tirades that you have directed at me.

For as long as you are prepared to illustrate so graphically
the difference between a CBer, an M3/CB Fools' Licensee, a CBer-Masquerading-As-A-Radio-Ham and a _REAL_ Radio
Ham with his gentlemanly traditions, I am prepared to watch you bemusedly from the sidelines and to chastise
you for your ridiculous outbursts.

It is important that we as Radio Hams make a stand for
civilised behaviour and decency against the vile CBer,
no matter how he might have slipped into our midst.

Don't you realise how silly and ridiculous you make yourself
look, by indulging in what are essentially very infantile abusive tirades in an international forum that is broadcast to the whole world?

However, if you wish to be perceived as a Childish Broadcaster (CBer)
then just carry on as you are with your Childish Broadcasting (CB).

Grow up, Galen!

Stupid child.

I am pleased that you tire of your infantile behaviour. There is hope for you, yet. But please remember that it is not just you who is made to look a fool by your behaviour; your behaviour affects the public face of Radio Hammery, and thereby affects us all.

Sleep on, awaken refreshed and hopefully of a more mature perspective than you have presented in your recent posts.

Sorry, I was over on the LinRadio console actually doing ham radio (it's sunrise here) instead of provoking what could be described as the 21st century version of Inspiration for the Sex Pistols.

Where were we? Oh yes,

If you were a real ham radio op you'd be on the radio instead of playing Lord of the Gnats.

Indeed. And here are some seasonal songs specially for you Gareth:

"Santa Claus is Coming to Get Me"

"You Better Watch Out, I'm Gonna Cry, I'm Gonna Pout, Maybe I'll tell You Why"

"Walking in a Winter Wonderland Miles From My House in My Slippers and Robe"

"I Saw Mommy Kissing Santa Claus So I Burned Down the House"

I don't think he is, I think he's someone who finds himself unhappy with his lot in life and instead of trying to improve what he can (starting with himself) he instead denigrates what's around him in a futile attempt to elevate himself. He draws ridicule like a magnet because he continues to denigrate after receiving helpful and occasionally nasty suggestions to recognize his deluded behavior. A legend in his own mind but a joke that has become all too pitiful and no longer funny after too much repetition in the view of others.

What is Ham Radio?

Ham Radio is a technical pursuit for those who are interested in the science of radio wave
propagation and who are also interested in the way that their radios function. It has a long-standing tradition of providing a source of engineers who
are born naturals.

Ham Radio awakens in its aficionados a whole-life
fascination with all things technical and gives
an all-abiding curiosity to improve one's scientific knowledge. It's a great swimming pool, please dive in!

This excitement causes a wish to share the experience
with ones fellow man, and shows itself in the gentlemanly traditions of Ham Radio.

Radio Hams are in a unique privileged position in that they can construct and operate their own equipment! No-one else has this privilege. Users, such as broadcasters,
the po lice and armed farces, CBers and mobile phone users have to purchase ready-made gear. Manufacturers
are not licensed to operate their gear. Radio Hams
are qualified to design, build and then operate their own pieces of equipment. They do this
with gusto, and also repair and modify their own equipment. This is a privilege well worth the effort
to gain, and one to be jealously guarded.

The excitement that drives a Radio Ham starts with relatively simple technologies at first, perhaps making
his own Wimshurst machine and primary cells. Small pieces
of test equipment follow, possibly multimeters and signal generators. Then comes receivers and transmitters. It is with the latter that communication with like-minded technically motivated people takes off. The scope for technical development grows with the years
and now encompasses DSP and DDS. There is also a great deal of excitement in the areas of computer programming to
be learnt and applied.

The technical excitement motivates Radio Hams to compete
with each other to determine who has designed and manufactured

the best-quality station. This competitiveness is found in DXing, competitions and fox-hunts.

-----OOOOO----

However, beware! A Ham Radio licence is such a desirable thing to have that there are large numbers of people who wish to be thought of
as Radio Hams when, in fact, they are nothing of the kind! Usually such people are a variation of the CB Radio hobbyist; they buy their radios off the shelf and send them back to be repaired; they are not interested in technical discussion
and sneer at those who are; they have no idea how
their radios work inside and have no wish to find out;
they are free with rather silly personal insults;
they have not satisfied any technical qualification
and their licences prevent the use of
self-designed-and-built equipment.

These CB types engage in the competitive activities
with their Cheque-Book-purchased off-the-shelf radios
in a forlorn effort to prove that they are Radio Hams.

No _REAL_ Radio Hams are deceived by such people!

-----ooooo-----

One such CB type is the so-called "Not-Ham". Otherwise known as the CBer-Masquerading-As-A-Radio-Ham, this type
had their background in the hobby that is CB Radio and not in the technical pursuits that lead up to a coveted Ham licence.
Easily recognised by their boasts of the criminal activity of 11 metre SSB operation, one wonders why they don't go back to the CB Bands if such bands are dearer in their hearts than are the Ham Bands? No _REAL Radio Hams associate with those who made an illegal installation of transmitting equipment before being
in possession of an appropriate licence.

-----ooooo-----

One infallible way to disambiguate the CB Radio Hobbyist
from the _REAL_ Radio Ham is to solicit their view of the difference between CB Radio and Ham Radio. A Radio Ham will perceive Ham Radio to be a technical pursuit and will perceive CB Radio to be a social communications facility
no different in essence to a land-line telephone or a GSM mobile in the hands of a 6-year-old. Thus a Radio Ham
could also hold a CB licence safe in the knowledge that such a licence says no more about him than having a land-line telephone, whilst continuing to regard Ham Radio as a separate technical pursuit.

A CB Radio hobbyist, on the other hand, sees no difference between a Ham Radio licence and a CB Radio licence. To him, they are sisters-under-the-skin. Wrongly, the CB Radio Hobbyist then tries to classify himself as the equal of the Radio Ham when, in fact, he is nothing of the kind. A sure sign of a CB Radio hobbyist is if he holds, or has ever held, a licence issued under the gangrenous degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme.

-----ooooo-----

One group of people who claim to be of the standard of Radio Hams but who are in reality nothing more than an apology for the failure of a CBer are those class B licensees who falsely proclaimed that they were against the use of a Morse Test to control access to the HF bands, until, that is, a test was introduced at their intellectual level, the intellectual level of 6-year-olds.

6 year-olds simply lack the mathematical tool kit to enable them to handle even the simplest algebraic manipulation for Ohm's Law and thus, the disgraceful Class Ber's in the aforementioned category are not Radio Hams by any stretch of the imagination!

Remember - A sure sign of a CB Radio hobbyist is if he holds, or has ever held, a licence issued under the gangrenous degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme!

I too like Gareth...he never switches allegiance on a whim...and I think he says what's on his mind...even if most of us don't agree with him...

Merry Christmas whoever you are this week...

I personnaly think a 3 license structure (Learners permit, General and Extra)
would serve the amateur service well. I'd suggest the following also:

Leraner's permit (10 year non-renewable, 200 watts or less, access to a good spectrum of HF plus VHF and UHF)

General, as is today but grandfather all existing generals to full power with a 500w limit on new generals after rules go into effect

Extra, as today

Cheers,

Bill,

I thought you'd be more forward looking than that. You've just proposed a re-run of 1968, and to no good purpose.

Learners permit should have access to ALL spectrum, so that they rub shoulders on the air with everyone. Reduced output (50W max?) so they don't hurt themselves or the spectrum too badly.

Reducing new General to 500W serves what purpose, other than to set up a new divisive factor in amateur radio?

Beyond the entry level license, there should be ONE class of hams, just ONE.

For as long as you are prepared to illustrate so graphically
the difference between a CBer, an M3/CB Fools' Licensee, a CBer-Masquerading-As-A-Radio-Ham and a _REAL_ Radio
Ham with his gentlemanly traditions, I am prepared to watch you bemusedly from the sidelines and to chastise
you for your ridiculous outbursts.

It is important that we as Radio Hams make a stand for
civilised behaviour and decency against the vile CBer,
no matter how he might have slipped into our midst.

Don't you realise how silly and ridiculous you make yourself
look, by indulging in what are essentially very infantile abusive tirades in an international forum that is broadcast to the whole world?

However, if you wish to be perceived as a Childish Broadcaster (CBer)
then just carry on as you are with your Childish Broadcasting (CB).

You, coming as you do from a background as a ship's radio
"officer", really ought to know better. Shame on you.

Grow up, Mike Gathergood!

Stupid boy.
